AFL Rodmen Plan Strike On Builders In D. C. Area

Set to Go Out Monday Unless Demand for 15-Cent-an-Hour Pay Increase Is Granted

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

AFL rodmen will strike Monday morning at all Washington area construction projects at which they are refused a 15-cents-an-hour pay raise.

Announcement of the scheduled walkout was made yesterday by Raymond O. Boyd, business agent for the Reinforced Steel Workers, Local 201.

Boyd disclosed that at least 10 builders and subcontractors have agreed individually to the union's request for an immediate raise of 10 cents an hour, and an additional raise of 5 cents on January 1.

The rodmen's strike will take place exactly two weeks after the construction industry in this area resumed operations following the settlement of a 6½-week strike by the AFL carpenters and building laborers, which paralyzed 100 million dollars of construction and threw between 15,000 and 20,000 persons out of work.

Dump-truck Drivers to Strike

Right behind the rodmen, the AFL dump-truck operators are also preparing to strike the construction industry on Wednesday morning for a 32-cent-an-hour increase.

Before the week is over, a third AFL building trades group, the ready-mix concrete truck drivers, may also strike in a demand for 15 cents more an hour.

Any one or all three will not be as effective and widespread as the dual strike of the carpenters and laborers, but individual construction jobs could be tied up by the lack of trucks or rodmen.

The rodmen—a small craft of little more than 200 mechanics—play a key role in the laying of concrete foundation and the building of concrete walls. They have been getting $2.35 an hour under their old contract, which expired April 30.

25-Cents Raise Asked at First

The original demand of the rodmen was a raise of 25 cents an hour, but later the union lowered it to 10 cents an hour raise plus 5 cents more on January 1, 1950, with the wage agreement to run to June 30, 1950. The Master Builders Association, made up of 44 general contractors, has offered 10 cents an hour—the figure for which the carpenters struck and settled, and which the laborers accepted.

Unable to get the master builders to agree to 10 and 5, the rodmen have gone ahead and signed up 10 contractors and subcontractors, including five concerns affiliated with the Concrete Contractors' Association, according to Boyd. The local's business agent listed

Okinawa Silent After Typhoon Strikes at 126 MPH

Tokyo (Sunday) July 24 (AP).—A U. S. Air Force plane flew over the stormy Pacific today in an effort to penetrate the silence shrouding Okinawa since a typhoon hit the island yesterday with 126-mile-an-hour winds.

There has been no communication with the American island base since 2 p. m. yesterday (midnight, EST, Friday). An hour earlier a plane had reported the storm-center directly over the island. It said the center, or "eye," was 40 miles in diameter.

It was dead calm inside the "eye" but the observers could see heavy seas lashing the island where the U. S. Twentieth Air Force has hundreds of planes and thousands of men and their families.

Air Force headquarters here said there was little cause for alarm. Precautions are always taken. Storms often blow down radio towers.

Heiress, 6, Held Better Off On Rural Mountain Than Here

Former Senator Robert R. Reynolds and Mamie

Six-year-old heiress Mamie Spears Reynolds is better off living high on a hill near Asheville, N. C., than in the big-city atmosphere of Washington or New York, District Court was told yesterday.

This opinion was given by Attorney Daniel W. O'Donoghue. He recently returned from an inspection of the surroundings of Mamie, the daughter of former Senator Robert R. Reynolds and the late Evalyn McLean Reynolds, who died in 1946 from an overdose of sleeping medicine.

Reynolds earlier this year asked court permission to use some of Mamie's fortune to acquire full

Brief Respite From Heat Promised

Relief from the week-long heat and humidity, moderate but definite, will bless Washington and its sweltering residents over the weekend, Government forecasters said last night.

A mass of cool and drier air is moving eastward, and the leading edge of it passed over Washington about noon yesterday. The temperature stayed in the 90s through the afternoon, but the humidity began to decline.

The prediction for today is "mostly sunny, less humid, and not so warm. Highest in upper 80s."

The cool caress is due for only a brief stay, the forecasters said. They added that the humidity will probably start upward again on Monday, and the temperature on Tuesday.

The maritime tropical air mass which has lain over Washington like a heavy wool blanket for days, finally was nudged southeastward by a high pressure area. Center of the high, forecasters said, was over Minnesota Friday, Michigan yesterday, and will be about at Albany, N. Y., today.

Then it is expected to veer northeastward making way for more perspiring days from the South.

The high yesterday was 92 at 5 p. m. and the low 79 at 4:18 a. m. From 6 a. m. until 1 p. m., the temperature crawled upward through the 80's, reached 90 at 2 p. m., 91 at 4 p. m., and 92 at 5 p. m. High relative humidity was 81 per cent just after midnight yesterday morning. It continued downward to 42 per cent when the 92 maximum temperature was recorded.

Police reported no heat prostrations yesterday, in contrast with seven on Friday, when the season's high record temperature of 96 was equalled.

Police said that most persons not lucky enough to be vacationing yesterday apparently stayed at home.

Fall Off Tree Kills Police Lieutenant

A 20-foot fall from a tree he was trimming to a concrete sidewalk brought death yesterday to Police Lieut. Lewis D. Redman. He was a night inspector attached to headquarters.

He died at Georgetown University Hospital of what attaches said were multiple fractures and concussion. He also suffered a fractured wrist.

Police said Redman, who lived at 5528 Broad Branch rd. nw., was working on a ladder in the yard of a neighbor, Irving Wechsler, 5530 Broad Branch rd., trimming a tree which overhung his yard. The ladder slipped, they said, and he struck on his head.

Turkish Quake Kills Scores in Port on Aegean

Istanbul, Turkey, July 23 (AP).—Scores of persons were reported killed today in a violent earthquake in the vicinity of Izmir, Turkey's second largest port on the Aegean Sea.

The quake started at 5:08 p. m. (10:08 a. m. EST) and lasted five seconds. Karaburun, at the entrance of an estuary leading to Izmir, was reported to have been worst stricken. Communications were disrupted, preventing an accurate check on casualties.

More than 100 houses were reported razed at Karaburun, which has a population of 7000.

Texas Newscaster, 28, Finds Kin Here After Years' Search

By Jean Reiff
Post Reporter

For most of his 28 years, Al Mann, radio newscaster in Amarillo, Tex., was a lone operator.

His efforts to locate any relatives had failed. He had a "hunch" some of them might be living, but not a clew to their whereabouts.

Then, suddenly, a week ago, he hit the jackpot. It was a fat letter from a cousin, telling him that his half sister, his half brother, and aunts, uncles and cousins galore were living in this part of the country.

Yesterday, Mann arrived in Washington by plane shortly after noon. With tears and shouts of happiness, he was greeted by his half sister, Mrs. Dorothy Matz, 33, of 1805 S. Pollard st., Arlington, and his half brother, Staff Sergt. Andrew Beaver, 36, of Route 2, Alexandria. He had never seen either of them before. They had remained here when his mother remarried and moved on, first to Kentucky, where he was born, and then to Ohio.

The story of how he finally tracked down his family, is one of persistence, blocked by errors in the spelling of names.

He was orphaned at the age of 2½ years in Cincinnati, and spent most of his youth in foster homes. In 1939, he joined the Army, receiving a discharge as a first lieutenant in the infantry six years later.

During all these years, he was under the impression that his mother's maiden name was spelled Lehman. He believed her father was living and in the Army, but all inquiries about an Otis Lehman brought only negative replies.

Recently he had to obtain his mother's death certificate in Cincinnati to prove his residency in that State. It was then he found

Virginia's Editors Give Battle Edge

Observers Point To Whip-Cracking By Organization As Primary Nears

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., July 23.—As Virginia's supercharged gubernatorial primary enters its final 10 days, most observers concede Senator John S. Battle a slight edge on his three opponents.

All four Democratic candidates acknowledge candidly that the race—expected to draw 300,000 voters to the polls August 2—is as close as an attic on a summer day.

However, most Virginia newspaper editors and other veteran observers of Old Dominion politics think that belated whip-cracking by "organization" leaders has put Battle in front by a nose.

Upset Not Discounted

But while giving Battle the lead as of now, almost all predictions were qualified with the statement that the final 10 days could upset the forecasts.

The feeling is widespread that the campaign, Virginia's bitterest in 30 years, is the strongest threat yet to the "Byrd organization."

These are the Democratic contestants:

Senator Battle, of Charlottesville, chairman of the State Senate Finance Committe, veteran of 20 years' unswerving loyalty to the dominant organization and therefore the front-runner in the race.

Francis Pickens Miller, of Albemarle County, a former member of Virginia's House of Delegates and World War II colonel, candidate of a heterogeneous mixture of "anti-organization" Democrats. He generally is thought to be Battle's strongest opponent because of a splintering of the more conservative vote among the other three candidates.

Plurality Necessary

Horace H. Edwards, former mayor of Richmond, who resigned the chairmanship of the State Democratic Central Committee in defiance of the "Byrd machine" to run for Governor in the "middle of the road."

Roanoke, Va., July 23 (Spl.).—Candidate John S. Battle's last name has obvious implications in the close Virginia gubernatorial campaign.

But it took Clifton A. Woodrum, former Sixth District Congressman, to underscore them at a rally for candidate Horace H. Edwards here Thursday night.

"Let us gird up our loins for battle," Woodrum said. His wife signaled frantically from the audience.

Woodrum promptly amended, "Let us gird up our loins for the fight."

Lehman Hits Spellman in Barden Row

Former Governor Says Mrs. Roosevelt Has No Religious Or Racial Bias

Lake Placid, N. Y., July 23 (U.P.).—Former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman today came wholeheartedly to the defense of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, accused yesterday by Francis Cardinal Spellman of anti-Catholic prejudice, and said her life was without bias toward any religion or race.

Lehman, of Jewish faith and for many years a close personal friend of the Roosevelt family, said he was "deeply shocked" by the attack on Mrs. Roosevelt by the cardinal in connection with the Barden aid-to-education bill. He issued a statement from his home here, where he was spending the weekend.

"The issue is not whether one agrees with Mrs. Roosevelt on this or any other public question," Lehman said. "The issue is whether Americans are entitled freely to express their views on public questions without being vilified or accused of religious bias."

Cardinal Spellman had asserted, in a personal letter to Mrs. Roosevelt, that she was guilty of prejudice and anti-Catholicism in advocating that Federal funds for education should not be allocated to Catholic parochial schools. Spellman said her stand was "unworthy of an American mother."

Minces No Words

Mentioned as a likely candidate for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator from New York in the November election, Lehman risked invoking widespread animosity by stepping into the controversy. He minced no words. The text of his statement follows:

"I am deeply shocked at the attack of Cardinal Spellman on Mrs. Roosevelt. I strongly believe, as I have always believed, that in our American democracy every responsible citizen is entitled to express his or her views on public issues without being subjected to the accusation of being against any religion or any race.

"The issue is not whether one agrees or disagrees with Mrs. Roosevelt on this or any other public question. The issue is whether Americans are entitled freely to express their views on public questions without being villified or accused of religious bias.

No Trace of Prejudice

"Mrs. Roosevelt has been a public figure for 25 years. Her every act has been a matter of record. In that splendid record I do not know of a single act or word that would in the slightest degree indicate bias or prejudice against any religion or any race. Her whole life has been dedicated to a constant fight for tolerance and brotherhood of men as children of one God. She will, I am confident, retain the trust and the affection of all peoples irrespective of creed or race."

Mrs. Roosevelt has indicated that she will make a personal re-

District Merchants to Turn Tax Collectors in One Week

First of Eight Articles.

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

At midnight next Sunday, the District of Columbia will gain about 20,000 new tax collectors.

The collectors will be the city's merchants pressed into service in an attempt to meet the need for additional funds with which to run the city government.

For the most part, they will be in the penny business. The sales tax schedule runs:

0 to 13 cents—no tax.
14 to 63 cents, inclusive—1 cent.
64 cents to $1.13—2 cents.
One more penny on each additional 50 cents.

Judging by the experience in Maryland, where a sales tax has been in effect two years, there will be a lot of howling by both customer and collector, with the former complaining about the tax and the latter blasting the nuisance of collecting it and bemoaning the possibility of losing business to Virginia, which has no sales tax.

But in a matter of months, according to Maryland authorities, the tax payment becomes almost unconscious and residents give up spending time and money traveling across the line to save the few pennies.

The District tax differs from the Maryland one in two major respects:

1. It is a tax on the gross receipts of the merchant—not on the consumer—and he is required to reimburse himself by collecting from customers.

This means that if he sells six 15-cent items separately and collects 6 cents tax, he makes a profit of more than 4 cents, since he must pay only 2 cents on each dollar of sales. This "breakage" is his commission for the trouble of tax collecting. It will also offset sales below 14 cents which are not taxed to the consumer.

2. The District exemption list is broader than in Maryland. District exemptions are foods for home consumption, candy, ice cream, medicines, pharmaceuticals, drugs, meals selling for $1.25 or less, gasoline for motor vehicle, newspapers, Government publications, utilities used in manufacturing, livestock, fertilizers, seeds,

Rockets Fired From Ship Blast Cosmic Ray Activity Concept

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Two rockets fired from a Navy ship at sea have blasted holes in previous concepts of cosmic ray activity and may lead to better understanding of nuclear forces.

One scientifically important finding of the expedition, it was disclosed last night, is that cosmic ray activity above the atmosphere at earth's magnetic equator is twice as great as had been estimated.

Two Aerobee sounding rockets were fired from the deck of the USS Norton Sound last March at a point about 700 miles off the west coast of South America. Their flights to more than 65 miles above the sea were scientifically followed by telemetering receiver on two accompanying destroyers.

Dr. James A. Van Allen of Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory, in Silver Spring, Md., has since been studying the data obtained, and correlating it with other results obtained in

He Says He Paid

$32,860 Tax Held Owed By Builder

Federal tax lien notices were filed yesterday in District Court against 17 persons including John E. Byrne, widely known construction man.

The lien against Byrne, chairman of the Byrne Organization, Inc., 2607 Connecticut ave. nw., cited him as owing $32,860 in income taxes for 1943.

"We discussed this matter with the Bureau of Internal Revenue people and were making regular payments. I don't know why they have to file this lien now and give us the adverse publicity," Byrne told a reporter.

He explained that the tax officials computed his tax for 1943 at $150,000. He said that in the last 12 months, $120,000 has been paid and the rest will be forthcoming.

"There were no arguments, no trouble. They told us what they wanted and we agreed to pay it, although we had held out for a time on some contingent liabilities that were involved. There was no need for them to file the lien," he said.

"This sort of thing, filing liens,

Heat-Induced Lassitude Costs Hotel Man $390

The heat cost George Fay $390 yesterday.

Fay, a night auditor at the Martinique Hotel, 1211 16th st. nw., told police he had saved the money and intended to bank it Friday, but didn't make the effort because it was too hot.

That night, he concealed the money under a davenport cushion in the hotel lobby, he said, while he worked, so that if he were held up, he wouldn't lose it.

When he finished work at 8 a. m., yesterday, the money was gone.

Shots End Bloody Fight

Panther Bests Huge Gorilla In Two-Hour Battle in Cage

Spokane, Wash., July 23 (U.P.).—The remains of a gorilla, its arm torn off and its 320-pound body ripped to shreds by a maddened black panther in a ferocious jungle-like battle, was removed from the panther's cage by attendants today.

Some 400 spectators watched the unscheduled death struggle for two hours at nearby Liberty Lake last night before the gorilla, Barangtu, was shot to death with a .32-caliber rifle.

Blood-curdling shrieks and cries of anguish could be heard for more than a mile as the 185-pound panther clawed, slashed and tore at Barangtu in a 5-foot cage on the back of a truck. The gorilla had entered the panther's cage through an unfastened safety door.

A 600-pound lion in an adjacent cage added to the spine-chilling cries as he roared and lurched against the bars.

The gorilla and the panther, valued at about $2000 each, were part of the Ruby Wild Animal Show.

The rare panther still was so enraged after the battle he had to be chloroformed.

Diego, a trainer, said the gorilla and panther had been feuding since they left Missoula, Mont., recently.

An employe apparently forgot to fasten a safety door separating the two cages. Barangtu put his arm under the safety door and entered the panther's cage.

"Barangtu was the loser from the beginning," the trainer said. "The panther slashed at him with his claws and teeth. Barangtu tried to get his arms around the panther, but was kept off by those razorlike claws and teeth."

Show attendants fired blank .22 shots into the cage and hit the enraged animals with steel poles to stop the battle, but the gorilla and panther ignored their attempts.

Finally, after Barangtu's arm had been torn off, the gorilla's courageous but vain fight was ended with three shots.

Senator Urges Truman to Seek Accord With Reds To Curb Weapons

By the United Press

Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.) last night "respectfully" urged President Truman to begin a new effort to reach an agreement with Russia to reduce arms and strengthen the United Nations.

Vandenberg envisaged an arms reduction program under "dependable" guarantees and a curb on the U. N. veto power.

At the same time, the Senate Republican foreign policy leader said Mr. Truman's arms-for-Europe program, to be submitted to Congress Monday, should be confined to a "relatively short interim" period.

He said any long-term military aid plan under the Atlantic Pact should not be submitted to Congress until next year and should await development of a self-help defense program under the treaty.

Statement a Surprise

Vandenberg's statement, made in an interview, came as a surprise on the eve of a presidential message to Congress, Monday, to urge early action on a $1,450,000,000 initial arms aid program. It was made only 48 hours after the Senate gave overwhelming approval to the North Atlantic Defense Pact. The approval was accompanied by indications of serious trouble ahead for the pact's implementation through arms shipments.

The Administration's arms program for Western Europe and other non-Communist nations includes approximately 800 million dollars for new weapons—but no atomic bombs—it was disclosed last night.

Vandenberg declined to say whether he would oppose or support the arms plan. But he made clear that at this stage the arms plan does not bear the stamp of approval of bi-partisan foreign policy leaders. The Michigan Senator said he neither had seen the arms plan nor received details of it.

Underscoring his previously expressed concern lest the arms issue overshadow the pact and an affirmative American program for easing "cold war" tension, Vandenberg called on Mr. Truman to "reemphasize the objectives of strengthening the U. N., and, "as a last resort," call for a general conference to revise the U. N. Charter.

"I respectfully express the hope that the President will now reemphasize these other vitally important objectives and pursue them

Fight to Keep A-Data Begun By Knowland

Seeks to Tie Hands Of Truman on Giving Secrets to England

By The Associated Press

Senator Knowland (R., Calif.) threatened yesterday to carry to the Senate floor a fight to tie President Truman's hands against giving atomic bomb information to Great Britain or any other foreign nation.

Knowland, a member of the Senate-House Atomic Committee, said in a statement it is his "firm belief" that under the 1946 Atomic Energy Act "the executive branch of this Government and the Atomic Energy Commission have no legal or moral right to disclose information regarding our atomic weapons to any other nation without the approval of the Congress of the United States."

The California Senator thus brought into the open the issue members of Congress said was raised at a hush-hush Blair House conference of 16 top Government officials with President Truman recently.

The question whether the President, by his own action alone, could give Great Britain the final know-how on the making of atomic weapons was said to have caused explosive argument at the conference.

There were indications that while Knowland spoke only for himself, he had the sympathy, if not open backing, of most of the Republican members of the Senate-House committee, as well as some of the Democrats.

Knowland's statement follows:

"It is my firm belief that under the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 the executive branch of this Government and the Atomic Energy Commission have no legal or moral right to disclose information regarding our atomic weapons to any other nation without the approval of the Congress of the United States.

"Until the approval of Congress has been obtained or unless suitable world-wide controls, approved by the Congress, can be instituted,

Man Says Shot In Back Followed Food Complaint

A $25,000 damage suit was filed yesterday in District Court by a man who claims he was shot in the back after he complained about the food in the Brown Derby Restaurant, 1008 7th st. nw.

Vulgas is co-defendant with John E. Coconis, the owner. Bradford said through his attorneys, Arve E. Hancock and Andrew W. Carroll, that Vulgas fired three shots, one of which is still in Bradford's back.

Neckless Chick Idea Finally Lays an Egg

Byron, Calif., July 23 (AP).—A chicken with no neck would be a bigger boon to white-meat lovers than even the new wingless variety.

At least that idea ocurred to Lorenzo Armstrong when he read about wingless birds developed in the Midwest.

So Armstrong built his henhouses with low roofs. Feeding troughs were breast-high. The wire over the chicken runs were lowered. He figured if they kept their heads down the chickens' necks wouldn't grow.

He gave up today. The chickens just got humpbacked.

Churchill Says Red Chaos Is Imminent

Attlee Denounces 'Dishonest' Platform Of Conservatives

Durham, England, July 23 (U.P.).—Prime Minister Clement R. Attlee today denounced the Conservative Party's 1950 platform as "dishonest," and called on Labor Party supporters to rededicate themselves to the task of "giving a more abundant life for all."

Attlee warned that Britain "cannot afford strikes" like the London dock walkout now apparently nearing an end, and warned that, in the effort for a more abundant life "the margin between success and failure is a narrow one."

He assailed the Conservative program as "a great piece of window dressing" and "one of the most dishonest documents I ever read."

"It promises reductions in taxation and increases in expenditure whenever the Tories think they can capture the votes of the people," the Prime Minister added.

He spoke at a coal miners' "gala" here, after Labor Party Parliamentary Leader Herbert Morrison had assailed the opposition platform as "somewhat dishonest . . . woolly and reactionary," and predicted that "it will not win the election for the Tories."

"The miserable little things (the Conservatives) would not publish their program until they had seen ours," Morrison said. "There is a little bit of copycat in the program and a bit of cheap imitation about some of its features."

As the two government leaders spoke, new clouds appeared on the labor horizon.

Rail Slowdown Threatened

The threat of a slowdown on the nationalized railways, temporarily averted a short time ago, was renewed today when the National Railway Union rejected the wage decision of a conciliation board because it did not cover all of the nation's 620,000 rail workers.

Union President W. T. Potter said that "a very serious situation has developed," and it appeared that a slowdown already affecting trains in the Manchester area of northern England might spread over the country unless a wage settlement is reached quickly.

A special meeting of union delegates will consider the situation Monday.

New friction on the docks created the possibility of a renewed harbor strike despite the strikers' decision yesterday to return to their jobs at 7:45 a. m. Monday.

The stevedores agreed to go back to work, provided there was "no victimization" of the strikers and they were paid holiday bonuses. Lord Ammon, 76-year-old chairman of the Dock Labor Board, indicated last night that the bonus demand might be rejected.

Ammon, whose dismissal has been demanded by the dockers because of his attempt to deal firmly with the port strike, said that he did not consider a strike as behavior worthy of a bonus.

Ammon sought to end the strike earlier this week by ordering the stevedores to return to work within 36 hours or lose their jobs and union benefits. The government, however, repudiated Ammon's order almost as soon as it had been issued.

Pope Speech Not on Air

Britain's Economic Independence Held Aim of 'Tory' Party

Wolverhampton, England, July 23 (AP).—Winston Churchill today said the Conservative Party's main aim is to restore the greatness of Britain and "the first essential step is to regain our economic independence by earning our own livelihood."

Socialism and communism, he charged, differ only in methods.

The wartime prime minister, speaking before 40,000 here, said the Labor (Socialist) Government had steered Britain near a ruin that would "carry many other nations with us into chaos and communism."

"Never before in the history of human government has such great havoc been wrought by such small men," declared Churchill, departing from his prepared text.

The Conservative leader denounced "Socialist spendthrifts and muddlers" in bidding for public support in the parliamentary election due sometime before mid-1950. Churchill elaborated on the Conservative Party platform, released earlier.

"We mean to set the people free, so far as possible and as soon as possible, from wrong-headed planning and from official interference with our daily life and work," he said.

"Our Tory (conservative) faith is that the gifts and genius of our men and women, if released, will not be found unequal to the first task and duty of every community, namely to earn its daily bread."

Churchill declared socialism is a costly fallacy and "its most direct expression, nationalization, is a failure."

"The United States and the Dominion of Canada together have given to us subsidies which amount to nearly two billion pounds £1,750,000,000 (seven billion dollars) have come into this island by loan or gift from these two great capitalist countries, who also have their own troubles and burdens to bear . . .

"Our Socialist spendthrifts and muddlers have dissipated every overseas asset they could lay their hands on and, in addition, have exacted and extracted from our people a higher rate of taxation than was required at the very height of the war."

Churchill said the sterling area's dollar holdings of $1,600,000,000 "are the last reserves that stand between us and insolvency."

"The present government," he said, "has obviously no effective plan for dealing with this imminent peril."

It is impossible to "undo the harm that has been done" by nationalization, he said, but a Conservative government would "decentralize the management" of industries already under state control, such as coal and railways, and stop further steps in the same direction."

Churchill Offers Advice to Youth

Wolverhampton, England, July 23 (AP).—Winston Churchill gave this advice today to British youth:

"You are the people who are most concerned with what is now taking place. Make your own way in the world and give all you have to the service of your fellow man. Freedom alone can give you the chance. For that freedom we have fought triumphantly abroad and we will fight not less triumphantly at home."

The 74-year-old Conservative leader addressed his remarks to a group of young men and women after a party speech.

U. S. May Get Plea for Aid To Colonies

Paris, July 23 (U.P.).—The Foreign Ministers of Britain and France, meeting privately here today, reportedly discussed the possibility of obtaining American aid for a large-scale colonial development plan to combat the West European economic crisis.

British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman were closeted for two hours in what was officially regarded as a "purely informal" meeting.

Diplomatic sources said Bevin assured Schuman Britain would not yield to U. S. pressure to devalue the pound sterling at financial talks in Washington in September.

French and British sources said the two ministers also discussed former Italian colonies in North Africa, apparently without reaching a definite decision.

Leftist Priest Disciplined

Paris, July 23 (U.P.).—Roman Catholic Church officials said today they had taken disciplinary action against Abbe Jean Boulier, prominent leftist French priest, for direct disobedience of his bishop and not because of the Vatican's excommunication order against Communists.

Msgr. Roger Beaussart, acting Archbishop of Paris, yesterday forbade Abbe Boulier to say mass in the Paris diocese after September 14.

This was the first disciplinary action taken against a Catholic priest in France since the excommunication order.

A spokesman for Msgr. Beaussart said the disciplinary action has no connection with the papal edict.

"Abbe Boulier is not a member of the Communist Party," he said. "The penalty was inflicted on him for direct disobedience of his bishop's order not to attend the Congress of Dissident Catholics in Prague last week."

In Czechoslovakia

Priests Get Enrollment Warning

Prague, Czechoslovakia, July 23 (U.P.).—A Catholic Church circular warned Czechoslovak priests tonight that the state soon will launch an all-out campaign to enroll them in the government-sponsored "Catholic Action" organization, either by deceit or intimidation.

The mimeographed circular was smuggled to priests, together with a warning instructing all priests to burn it after reading.

The message warned priests not to sign any paper which the government could possibly exploit fraudulently.

It also warned them that more churchmen might soon be threatened with mass reprisals against their congregations if they tried to carry out the Vatican's excommunication of Catholic Communists.

The circular ordered all priests whose names appeared on the government list of indorsers of Catholic Action to renounce their adherence to the organization publicly.

Import Steps Taken

Rio De Janeiro, July 23 (AP).—President Eurico Gaspar Dutra said his government is taking steps to restrict Brazilian imports in order to match them with Brazil's available foreign currencies.

Belgians Plan New Effort to Form Cabinet

Brussels, Belgium, July 23 (U.P.).—The Social Christian (Catholic) Party Leader Gaston Eyskens, agreed today to try to form a new government. Reportedly along lines which would postpone action on the controversy about King Leopold III's future at least until fall.

Prince Regent Charles called on Eyskens to try to solve the political deadlock which has made it impossible to form a government since the June elections.

Leopold has been living in exile in Switzerland since his release from a Nazi concentration camp at the end of the war. The Socialists and other leftists blame him for surrendering Belgium to the Germans in 1940, and oppose his return.

Reds Forecast Good Harvest This Autumn

Moscow, July 23 (AP).—Soviet Russia's 1949 harvest prospects are good, the Central Statistical Administration reported today.

The statistical agency announced also that industrial production was running at 101 per cent of targets boosted since the first of the year, but indicated shortages of certain agricultural, electrical and other machinery.

Livestock production also was reported up since July 1, 1948: cattle 28 per cent; pigs 79 per cent; goats and sheep 11 per cent. The number of the animals was not stated.

The crop announcement reported "good" and "favorable" conditions resulting from June rains in all important farm areas, including the Ukraine and North Caucusus.

The official report went no further. But it has been announced there are 15 million more acres under cultivation this year than last, including four million additional acres in spring wheat.

Good yields everywhere presumably could mean a record total.

The industrial report said total output for April, May and June was 20 per cent above the same period last year.

It said June production was 46 per cent above that of June, 1948. The agency reported failure to meet the targets by producers of tractors, sowers and forestration machinery; steam turbines, electrical cables and metal equipment; compressors and rolled steel.

Items produced in excess of targets included ferrous and nonferrous metals, coal and petroleum products, electric power, freight cars, trolley-buses, automobiles, buses, roller bearings, metal lathes and textile machinery.

Light consumer goods also were reported over the targets, including phonographs, cameras, watches, cotton, wool and linen goods, silk, footwear, canned goods, meats, tea, soap, liquors, cigarettes and champagne.

Pope Sees Mrs. Dionne

Vatican City, July 23 (U.P.).—Pope Pius XII today received Mrs. Oliva Dionne, mother of the Canadian quintuplets, in special audience. Mrs. Dionne came here from France, where she visited the famous shrine at Lourdes.

Franc Waxes, Pound Wanes; American Dollars Are Factor

Paris, July 23 (AP).—Better conditions in France, plus ERP dollars, have restored the franc nearly to its official value while the British pound has been slipping.

Five months ago it took 560 francs to buy a dollar on the black market. Today it takes 345. The official rate is 318. The pound, officially, 1090 francs, is quoted in the uncontrolled market at 920.

Traders and bankers are not convinced by official claims the franc has become one of the world's strong currencies. They will wait and see.

Nevertheless, the franc has made real gains. Bankers and traders here give these basic explanations:

1. European Recovery Plan dollars supply most of France's dollar needs. Equipment this money buys is beginning to take hold in industry.

2. France has managed to keep a general government fairly steady for nearly a year. The improved international situation has calmed nerves. Frenchmen are investing more freely.

3. Good crops cut the number of dollars needed to buy food outside of France. Various factors have calmed the fears of investors who rushed last winter to convert francs into gold.

4. The government has prohibited all buying of foreign goods with unregistered dollar accounts.

5. France is having one of its best tourist seasons, taking in about $800,000 a day.

France's advantage over England is this: Her economy is almost self-sufficient. She normally does not have to spend abroad for food, and even exports some food.

Wainwright Calls Pact Bid for War

In Assembly

French Reds Fail to End Pact Debate

Paris, July 23 (AP).—The French National Assembly voted more than two to one today against a Communist motion to adjourn debate on ratification of the North Atlantic Treaty indefinitely.

The count was 407 to 186, with Communists and their sympathizers supplying the smaller total.

With that out of the way, the deputies put off further talk until Monday. When the treaty finally comes up for ratification balloting, the vote is expected to be about the same as that of today.

The legislatures of seven nations have ratified the 12-nation agreement to date, but action by France and the Netherlands is necessary before it can become effective.

The upper house of the Dutch Parliament is to debate the pact next Wednesday and Thursday. In France the pact must be submitted to the upper house, the Council of the Republic, though rejection there can be overridden by a mere majority of the National Assembly. Less opposition, however, is expected in the council than in the Assembly.

Final approval of the treaty, which links American and western European nations in an alliance against aggression, is pending in Demark, Italy and Portugal.

The ratification process has been completed by the United States, Canada, Britain, Luxembourg, Belgium, Iceland and Norway.

Battle Looms On Atom Data

as envisioned by the Baruch proposals for international atomic safeguards, I shall vigorously oppose, as a member of the joint committee and on the floor of the Senate, any effort to transmit such atomic weapon information to any other nation on the face of the earth.

"Once the information is imparted it can never be regained. I believe this issue is of great magnitude to the future of our republic. Opposition to revealing weapon information without congressional approval will, in my opinion, be intense."

Apprised of Knowland's statement, Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.) declined comment. There were signs, however, that he shares Knowland's view.

The act bars export of fissionable materials and of atomic weapons. It says no information on "industrial" application of atomic power shall be given other nations until there is an international control agreement.

Senator Hickenlooper (R., Iowa), former chairman of the Senate-House committee, has contended that A-bomb making comes under the industrial clause and thus bars the exchange of information.

On the other hand, Chairman David E. Lilienthal of the Atomic Energy Commission is reported to hold the belief that the President has inherent authority to exchange atomic information with the British by executive agreement.

Such an agreement would bypass Congress. A Democratic official has emphasized that Mr. Truman at the Blair House meeting was not threatening to act without officially consulting Congress.

Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright, the hero of Bataan and national commander of the Disabled Americanican Veterans, yesterday condemned the Atlantic Pact as a "straight invitation to another world war."

He said this country lacks the military "punch" to back up the treaty and urged that America spend money on defense and veterans' bospitals instead of "giving away millions and even billions of dollars to foreign countries."

"There is a mad dog ready to gobble up any small country," Wainright declared at the twenty-eighth annual convention of the District chapter of DAV in the Washington Hotel.

"If that mad dog happens to bark and run into Holland, Beigium, Denmark or any of the other countries we have made a military treaty with, we are bound to load up a shot gun and go after that mad dog," he said.

"That doesn't make sense to me, particularly at this time when we have let down so much in our defensive armament," he said.

Asserting that America demobilized too much and too quickly after the last war, he called for conscription.

"We have probably on hand today sufficient arms and equipment to build a grand fighting force. The thing we don't have is men. The only way to get this is universal military training.

Will Not Have It Ready.

"I certainly don't want to see another war—I've seen four—but if we are ready for it we will not have it."

He also urged that the 16,000 bed cutback proposed for Veterans Administration hospitals be abandoned. He said a "powerful nation like this should take better care of its veterans."

Another convention highlight was approval of a resolution which "condemns most vehemently the Hoover Commission report and recommendations on personnel management and the United States Civil Service Commission."

Reiterate Support of Act

"We reiterate our strong support of any resistance to any weakening of the Veterans Preference Act of 1944, "the resolution stated. "We will only support proposed amendments to said act that would strengthen it."

The group also went on record as demanding "adequate hospital facilities" in this area for disabled veterans and "aditional retention credit in Civil Service reductions in force" for disabled veterans.

At the banquet last night that wound up the two-day session, Gen. Wainwright presented to the District Commissioners a citation for their cooperation with veterans. Commissioner Guy Mason made the acceptance address.

Another certificate was presented to Representative Olin E. Teague (D., Tex.), Silver Star and Purple Heart veteran who is on the House Veterans Affairs Committee.

William T. Slattery, former District Department Commander of the American Legion, was reelected for a second term as District DAV commander.

Slattery, of 1929 Otis st. ne., is a claims examiner at the General Accounting Office. He is a veteran of both World Wars.

Others elected were: Albert C. Allen, senior vice commander; George H. Lane, junior vice commander; Stephen M. Honus, chaplain; Kenneth Wiper, treasurer; and Fred C. Costigan, representative to the GAR Memorial Day committee.

U. S. Reported As Optimistic On Palestine

Lausanne, Switzerland, July 23 (U.P.).—Paul A. Porter, new American member of the United Nations Palestine Conciliation Commission, said today the United States Government is "somewhat optimistic" about Arab-Israeli peace talks here.

Porter, said he was not at liberty to reveal "firm instructions" he received from President Truman before leaving Washington.

"However, there has been no considerable shift in United States policy, which has been continuous since the Conciliation Commission began work," Porter said.

A recent recess in the peace talks ended Monday, but Porter said he did not expect much activity here until next week.

West Europe Model Indonesian Setup Plan

Jogjakarta, Java, July 23 (AP).—A government on the west European model is the reported choice of Indonesian political leaders for the projected United States of Indonesia.

Republican officials and representatives of 15 other Indonesian states and territories adjourned here last night after three days' discussion of the future of the islands after the Dutch yield control. They plan to meet again in Batavia, July 30.

A discussion on union with the Netherlands also was deferred.

Peasants Rebel In Manchuria

Shift to Britain?

Tibet Rulers Kick Chinese Officials Out

By Spencer Moosa

Canton, China, July 25 (AP).—The priestly rulers of Tibet have kicked out Chinese government officials in the latest effort to smash Chinese influence in that remote land at the top of the world, qualified Canton sources reported tonight.

The Chinese Nationalists claim suzerainty (a sort of feudal control not so definite as sovereignty) over Tibet.

A Chinese diplomatic mission, a radio station and school long have been maintained at Lhasa, remote capital in the Himalaya Mountains.

Canton sources said that on July 7 the Tibetan state council—the Lamas who rule in the name of the teen-age Dalai Lama—ordered all Chinese government personnel out of Tibet within two weeks.

The informants said the Chinese departed immediately for India. They hinted that British influence may have caused the Tibetan action. Britain and China long have vied for paramount position in the country.

First hint of trouble in Tibet reached the Western world a couple of days ago when the Indian government disclosed suspension of all telegraph and radio service except government messages as of July 9. No reason was given. Vague reports of a Communist-inspired uprising in Tibet were denied in India, however. There has been no word of actual disorder.

In Canton, it was said that the weakening of the Chinese Nationalists through Communist civil war victories may have influenced the Tibetan action, but that it was not directly instigated by the Reds.

The current anti-Nationalist movement, was seen as largely opportunistic. It was said to have been partly based on Chinese government plans to send an official representative to the future enthronement of the Panchan Lama.

Nanking, July 23 (AP).—Reliable reports reaching this Communist-held city say rebellious peasants in Manchuria—heartland of Red China—are committing sabotage and carrying on guerilla warfare.

Responsible Chinese sources report the peasants have blown up bridges, destroyed railway roadbeds and committed industrial sabotage.

Isolated patrols of Communist soldiers are said to have been attacked.

The scale of the peasant unrest cannot be determined, but high Communist officials are quoted as terming it "serious." They attribute it to bandits and Nationalist agents.

The Communists have held much of Manchuria since 1945 and all of it since Last December. They regard it as the key base for their program of modernizing all China.

First intimation of trouble with the peasants—who have largely been the main Red supporters—came last month from the official Communist New China News agency. It reported Communist troops had suppressed scattered peasant revolts led by Nationalist agents, landlords and bandits in Kiangsu and Anhwei provinces.

Travelers say revolts also have occurred in Shensi and Honan Provinces.

(All these provinces mentioned are in China-proper, not Manchuria. This sudden shift from a report on Manchuria to discussion of conditions in central China might indicate Communist censorship of this story. There was no external evidence of censorship, but dispatches from Nanking must pass through Shanghai, where the Communist military censorship operates.)

The majority of these revolts are reported to be nonpolitical. The dissidents are peasants opposing heavy taxes. In North Kiangsu, one such group raised the slogan: "Oppose the Communists and exterminate the Nationalists."

Peasant uprisings in North Anhwei follow a general pattern. Poorly armed peasants there attacked Communist soldiers and killed an official while resisting tax collections.

Strong Communist forces, sent out to districts where revolts have flared, usually find nothing but peasants peacefully tilling their fields.

The Reds now are experiencing what the Nationalists went through.

Evacuation of Changsha Near

Hongkong, July 23 (U.P.).—Gen. Pai Chung-hsi has abandoned Changsha as the principal Nationalist base in south central China, it was reported today, and it appeared the Hunan provincial capital might surrender without a fight.

Reports from Changsha said Pai evacuated Nationalist government headquarters southward to Hengyang, 100 miles below Changsha on the Canton-Hankow railway, as three Communist columns closed within 30 miles of Changsha.

However, other reports indicated the three Communist columns might bypass Changsha and attack the rail city of Chuchow, 35 miles south, sealing off government troops along the railway.

Gen. Chen Ming-jen, newly appointed governor of Hunan, indicated Changsha might not be defended. Chinese reports quoted him as saying he would do his utmost to "prevent the residents of Changsha from hearing the sounds of gunfire."

Chen was considered a faithful disciple of Chiang Kai-shek.

Newsper reports here and in Canton indicated the Communists might be driving directly on Hengyang. Several reports said troops in Kiangsi province, east of Hunan, were attacking Lienhwa, 80 miles east of Hengyang.

Elsewhere in Kiangsi, the Nationalists were reported putting up a heavy battle at Taiho, 80 miles south of the Communist headquarters of Kian, inflicting "heavy" losses.

In other developments:

The Nationalist government denied a Communist report it will organize a foreign volunteer air force under Maj. Gen. Claire Chennault.

The government continued the evacuation of silver bullion stocks to Chungking aboard nine chartered planes.

sands of miles which offers a basis for measuring energy of the rays, and the ratio of intensity at different latitudes determines the energy.

The Aerobee rockets used on the Navy vessel were designed primarily for high-altitude research. Each carried 150 pounds of scientific instruments for recording data to altitudes ranging from 65 to 78 miles.

China, Sen. McCarran Protest 'White Paper' Publication

By the United Press

China has formally protested the United States Government's intention to publish its "white paper" on Chinese-American relations at this time on grounds that it might give "moral support" to the Communists, it was learned yesterday.

Ambassador Wellington Koo, acting upon instructions from Canton, has asked the State Department to "reconsider" its decision to release the controversial document at a period when the Chinese Nationalists "are fighting a life and death struggle against all-out communism," Chinese informants said.

They added that the department so far has made no reply to Koo's request for delay.

The State Department originally intended to publish the "white paper" on July 26. Officials said yesterday, however, that the release has been delayed about a week because of "printing difficulties."

The document is expected to heap considerable criticism on Chinese Nationalists for their allegedly inefficient and corrupt prosecution of the war against the Communists.

Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.) said in a statement that now is not the time "to try to justify a past erroneous policy by revealing the personal hatreds and indulging in fault-finding" through the 'white paper.'

"It is earnestly hoped—and I know I express the hope of many members of the Senate—that the State Department will refrain from any such action at this time," McCarran said.

He expressed belief that the white paper would constitute an "official action calculated or designed to weaken opposition to the spread of communism in Asia."

McCarran added that, regardless of design, it would have that effect

"Although China would welcome clarification of outstanding aspects of Chinese-American relations during the last few years, this is not the best moment to bring out such a publication," one well-placed Chinese source said.

Criticism of China by the United States, which has assumed the role of leadership against Communism throughout the world, could be regarded only as "giving moral support to the Communists," according to this Chinese.

The white paper,, in addition to the parts criticizing the Chinese Nationalists, will contain the long-withheld report of Lieut. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, who surveyed the China situation for President Truman and then Secretary of State George C. Marshall in summer of 1947.

Release of the Wedemeyer report is expected to disclose the split between him and Marshall over the question of continued aid to Nationalist China.

Interim Aid In Arms Asked to the utmost limit," Vandenberg said. "We have taken one great nonaggressive step (the pact) toward collective peace.

"Let's finish the job—or make clear what stands in the way."

If Russia "stands in the way," it is known that Vandenberg believes the time then will be ripe for a "new approach" to the collective security problem.

This could mean through one of several proposals already offered Congress, which seek to establish a veto-proof U. N., with or without Russian participation, and an international police force to put teeth in the U. N. Charter.

Vandenberg's remark that he had not been consulted in advance on the arms program meant that President Truman, for the first time since the 1947 Greece-Turkey "quarantine communism" program, will seek to go it alone on a foreign policy program in Congress.

It meant that the arms program will be sent Congress without prior assurances of powerful Republican support.

'5 Per Cent' Probe Mentions Generals

150 Leave Monday

D. C. Airmen Will Train on Big Flattop

LIEUT. JACK MURNANE, 3402 15th st. ne., is one of the District men on maneuvers at Cherry Point, N. C., with Marine Fighter Squadron 321. He is piloting a FH1 Phantom jet plane as part of the training

The 150 area pilots and ground personnel of Naval Air Group 65 (Organized Reserves) will take off from Naval Air Station Anacostia on Monday for operational training aboard the carrier Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Operating from the Auxiliary Air Station at Oceana, Va., they will brush up on carrier tactical operations aboard the Navy's largest flattop, Monday through Wednesday. Lieut. Comdr. Howard Paine, USNR, is commanding officer of the group.

Lieut. David Bagley, 2633 Adams Mill rd. nw., commands the group's fighter squadron, and Lieut. J. B. Thompson, 2650 N. Quantico st., Arlington, the torpedo attack squadron. Both units are made up largely of war-seasoned pilots and crewmen.

Aboard the Carrier Roosevelt this week also will be 100 Greater Washington high school youths who are taking an eight-week course with the Naval Air Reserve Training Unit, Anacostia.

They fly to Norfolk, Va., this afternoon and embark Monday morning for the training cruise.

Also primed for maneuvers is Marine Fighter Squadron 321 of Anacostia, which will participate in war games along the North Carolina coast this week.

Now at Cherry Point, N. C., the Flying Leatherneck reserve unit will join other air reserve units in giving support to ground forces staging a simulated beachhead assault on "enemy" forces along the coast.

By The Associated Press

Senator Hoey (D., N. C.) said yesterday a secret diary in the "five per center" inquiry mentions some Congress members, but "doesn't necessarily indicate they are connected with any improper transactions."

At the same time, a Senate official who has studied the voluminous not books said it "absolutely contains nothing that incriminates anyone."

The diary, now in the hands of the Senate Investigations Subcommittee, was kept by James V. Hunt, a former Army officer and War Assets Administration employe. A Massachusetts manufacturer has asserted he paid Hunt for help in seeking a Government contract.

Hunt Denies Attempt

The manufacturer, Paul Grindle, said in a copyrighted story in the New York Herald Tribune that Hunt claimed friendship with Government officials and that he worked for a fee. Hunt has denied any attempt to sell influence.

The term "five per centers" refers to Washington agents who hire out to help get Government contracts, usually for 5 per cent of the gross proceeds. The practice is not illegal.

Two Army major generals already have been suspended as a result of the subcommittee's preliminary investigations. They are Herman Feldman, the Quartermaster General, and Alden H. Waitt, chief of the Chemical Corps.

Secretary of the Army Gray said they were being relieved of duty temporarily because they failed to exhibit judgment "expected of persons in their positions." The Army also is conducting an inquiry.

No Impropriety Indicated

Hoey is chairman of the Senate subcommittee which is getting ready to hold public hearings to learn whether influence figured in the award of Government contracts.

Referring to Hunt't diary, Hoey told reporters:

"The number of people mentioned in it include some Government officials—including some members of Congress. But that doesn't necessarily indicate that they are connected with any improper transactions."

The North Carolina lawmaker said he was not drawing any conclusions one way or another. And he stressed that the contents of the diary are being kept secret partly because many of the persons mentioned in it are obviously in no way implicated in five per center operations.

Hoey was asked whether his statement that some Government officials are mentioned in the notebook was meant to include White House officials. He replied briefly:

"White House officials are officials. I do not wish to get specific about anybody."

Hoey previously has made it clear that Feldman and Waitt are mentioned in the diary, but he has refused to discuss the matter further.

Amvets Seek Trust Fund

A request for a 15 million dollar trust fund to aid former service men and women will be submitted to the 1950 Virginia General Assembly by the Virginia Department of AMVETS.

The measure would establish the Virginia Veterans Aid Fund and create a State Department of Veterans' Affairs.

The plan announced in Richmond by the AMVETS calls for an initial appropriation of five million dollars, to be followed by increases of one million dollars per year for 10 years.

TRYGVE LIE
. . . under Red pressure?

Judith Coplon Finds Life Dull

New York, July 23 (U.P.).—Judith Coplon said today that if any FBI agents are shadowing her they must find her life pretty dull.

Miss Coplon, 28, convicted three weeks ago of giving secret Government documents to her professed married Russian boy friend, said she didn't know whether she was being trailed. But she said she suspected that her activities were so uninteresting that the FBI only makes a spot check now and then.

"If I am being followed, it's very dull for them," she said.

But a lot of ordinary citizens follow her when she walks to the corner grocery to shop for her mother, so they can get a good look at "that girl spy." They gawk in subways. They point at her when she goes out to dinner or a movie with one of her boy friends.

Miss Coplon said she daily visits the office of her attorney, Archibald Palmer, spending at least five hours going over the record of the Washington trial and helping him to find arguments to be included in her appeal.

Some of Miss Coplon's Brooklyn neighbors are raising money for her appeal.

Story of Red Terrorism in U. N. Is Denounced

By The Associated Press

A shadowy unidentified witness has told Congress the United Nations staff under Secretary-General Trygvie Lie is terrorized by Communist agents who force employes to become their tools.

U. N. officials promptly disputed the assertions, made by "Witness No. 8" before a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee.

Acting Secretary-General Byron Price called the story "fantastically untrue" and added: "This is the nuttiest story I have heard yet."

The subcommittee made public Witness No. 8's testimony today. It was given the committee some time ago behind closed doors. The witness spoke in broken English.

No clew as to his identity was given. But the testimony indicated he had worked for the U. N. in the past if not at present. Price's statement indicated he thought the witness was a U. N. employe.

The mysterious witness said Communist pressure comes "from the top of the secretariat of the secretary-general." He named no names in this connection. Nor did he indicate whether he meant those at "the top" were harboring Communists or being used by them.

He did, however, propose that the Senators seek the ouster of Lie and urge the appointment of a "capable" successor.

Lie is now vacationing in his native Norway. He said, through a representative, he did not care to make any comment; that the matter had been referred to Price.

Price declared in an official statement issued at U. N. headquarters in Lake Success, N. Y.:

"I am in a position to know that the charges relating to the administrative policies of Secretary-General Trygve Lie and personnel policies of the United Nations are fantastically untrue.

"I am sure that no fair-minded person will attach significance to the statement of a mysterious, so-called 'official' who attempts wholesale character assassination of his colleagues but refuses to give his name."

Lie's executive assistant, Andrew W. Cordier, termed witness No. 8's testimony "utterly fantastic."

He said Lie has "adhered strictly" to UN General Assembly policies with regard to recruitment of personnel.

Charles Mazel, whom the witness described as a "Communist agent" who once directed the Czech desk of the U. S. Office of War Information, said in New York he considered such testimony "an unimaginable infamy."

"I never in my life have had anything to do with the Communist Party or any other political party, either before, during or after the war," Mazel said.

Mazel said he was employed by the State Department for five years, and up until 1947 was in charge of the Czech desk of the OWI. "But," he added, "I never have had anything to do with the United Nations."

Other persons mentioned in witness No. 8's testimony were not immediately available for comment.

The witness said high United Nations officials from democratic countries fail to resist the pressure he said comes from "the top" of the U. N. staff.

No. 8 told the committee that "the Communist influence" in the U. N. secretariat could never have developed to the extent it has "if there had not been pressure from the top."

It is so great, he said, that "people, even of democratic conviction, who don't like to lose their positions, become instruments of the Communist apparatus or are frightened to resist and to take a clear-cut democratic standpoint."

"There must be," he said, a machine within the U. N. organizations which sees to it that employes who are hired from the different countries, including the United States, are of Communist inclination.

The witness said the only assistant secretary general who resisted was "the Australian, Commander Jackson," and added he was fired last summer under pressure from Arkady Sobolev, described as the Russian assistant secretary in charge of the security department.

Jackson "was dismissed by Trygve Lie on the insistence of Sobolev," the witness said.

The dismissal of Jackson, he continued, "increased the fear of the United Nations personnel. It was not any more sure of any protection."

At another point he remarked:

"The people are so afraid of losing their well-paid jobs there, under the pressure which is coming from the top, that they are swallowing everything which Trygve Lie wishes."

Among other things in his testimony, the witness said that Iron Curtain nations are favored over democratic nations in receiving U. N. fellowships to make studies in the United States.

As an example of Communists who have been employed in the U. N., the witness cited Paul Eisler, whom he identified as a Czechoslovakian citizen.

Eisler, he said, first was employed during the U. N. General Assembly in London and "for some time was the closest callaborator of Gunnar Myrdal as head of the European Economic Commission."

He said that Eisler later came to U. N. headquarters at Lake Success but since has quit to become "an economic adviser to the Czechoslovakian Communist President, Klement Gottwald."

The witness said that some Communists and fellow travelers came into the U. N from the old UNRRA organization

Barden Fears Row Perils School Bill

By the United Press

Representative Graham A. Barden (D., N. C.) expressed fear yesterday that a storm of religious controversy has endangered approval by Congress of a 300 million-dollar program of Federal aid to education.

Barden is the author of a bill which has stirred up a church feud because it proposes to withhold Federal tax money from private schools, including church institutions. A similar bill approved by the Senate left distribution of the money up to the States.

"The controversy has made members very cautious in expressing themselves," Barden told a newsman by telephone from his home in New Bern, N. C. ,"Before it came up, it would have passed the House three to one. Now, nobody knows."

Needs No Defense

Barden said that Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who drew the wrath of Catholic Cardinal Spellman of New York for expressing herself in favor of Barden's bill, "needs no defense at my hands."

Barden said he would not compromise the principle involved in the controversy and expressed strong doubt that parochial schools will get equal aid with public schools as demanded by the Catholics under the bill approved by the Senate.

"So far no compromise has been suggested to me," Barden said. "I expect to hold fast to my bill until something better comes along."

Cannot Be Compromised

"I am not one to insist that I am 100 per cent right and everybody else all wrong. I can compromise words, figures, phrases, even money, but on the principle of Federal tax money going to private schools, I don't believe the Government, Supreme Court or myself can compromise.

"If you leave it open for supporting any private schools, you leave it open to supporting any school that exists or that may be organized—by anybody from the Communists on up."

A move was under way, meanwhile, to still the controversy by letting parochial schols share in a proposed Federal aid fund for child health. Barden said that he is in favor of that bill.

Lehman Hits At Spellman

ply to Cardinal Spellman but that her answer will not be made public.

In his letter of yesterday, Cardinal Spellman said he would make no further public statement on the matter.

"Whatever you may say in the future, your record of anti-Catholicism stands for all to see—a record which you yourself wrote on the pages of history which cannot be recalled—documents of discrimination unworthy of an American mother."

Should Bear Expense

Behind the controversy was a bill before Congress, sponsored by Representative Graham A. Barden (D., N. C.) to bar parochial schools from Federal funds. Mrs. Roosevelt had written in her newspaper column, "My Day," on June 23 that she felt the traditional separation of church and state should be retained and that if parents wished to send their children to private or religious schools they should be willing to shoulder the expense.

Lehman succeeded Franklin D. Roosevelt as Governor of New York in 1933 when Mr. Rosevelt became President. Mr. Roosevelt often referred to Lehman as "my strong right arm."

In 1942, after four years in the governorship, Lehman accepted Mr. Roosevelt's call to become director of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. Lehman, now 71, quit that post in 1946.

Spellman Twisted Truth, Steed Declares

By The Associated Press

Representative Steed (D., Okla.) wrote Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday that the letter to her from Francis Cardinal Spellman criticizing her stand on Federal aid to public schools was "a masterpiece of distortion, misrepresentation and deliberate twisting of the truth."

Steed, a first-year member of the House, showed a reporter a copy of a letter he sent the widow of the late President after reading the Cardinal's letter.

"I am writing you to say that in all my experience I have never read a more clever bit of propaganda than this letter," he wrote.

"It could not have been written by anyone except a man who holds no regard for God's justice or truth—it was written by an expert of the highest skill and is the best example of the 'smear' that I have ever noted."

Steed told Mrs. Roosevelt he has had 25 years experience as a newspaperman and "had rather extensive service" during the war in propaganda analysis. He said he feels he has "a better than average background" for judging propaganda "when I see it."

18 Veterans Suing To Keep Navy Jobs

Eighteen veterans sued in District Court yesterday to prevent their discharge as machinists in the Naval Gun Factory here.

The suit asserts that nonveterans are to be used in their stead as the result of a reduction in force to go into effect July 31.

Through their attorney, Claude L. Dawson, the veterans claim they are entitled to preference in any reduction, since they are former servicemen with efficiency ratings of good or better.

They ask for injunctions to prevent their removal, and for a court declaration of their rights.

Defendants in the action are Francis P. Matthews, Secretary of the Navy; F. G. Fahrion, commandant of the Naval Gun Factory, and Capt. C. A. Printup, Industrials Relations officer.

The machinists suing are:

Charlie L. Pace, 2360 Skyland pl. se.; Hardy Leonard, 636 Atlantic st. se.; John H. Lohr, 730 10th st. se.; Raymond A. Hackenberg, 503 9th st. se.; Oliver R. Bair, 2810 Erie st. se.; Clayton W. Gray, 3402 McComas ave., Kensington, Md.; Jessie H. Stringer, 314 5th st. se.; Warren Hughes, 6321 8th st. se., and Frederick H. Thompson, Clinton, Md.

Democrat Hopes

Steel Peace Could Help T-H Foes

By The Associated Press

Administration leaders in Congress are depending on President Truman's intervention in the threatened steel strike to pull them out of the hole on repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor law.

They say some sort of settlement, based on recommendations from the presidential fact-finding board, is likely in the steel dispute and it will demonstrate the workability of Mr. Truman's proposal for handling national emergency strikes.

Taft-Hartley repeal, bogged down in the House Labor Committee, is dead for this session of Congress, a prominent House Democrat said privately yesterday. It will not be revived until next spring—about the time congressional primary election campaigns begin.

"By next spring," this Democrat explained, "tempers will have cooled off a little, and we will have the example of the steel strike to point to. Things will be a lot different then, with the primaries coming up."

When steel producers and the CIO United Steelworkers reached a deadlock early this month, the President stepped in after a strike date was set and asked for a 60-day truce.

He offered to name a three-man board of inquiry to study the controversy, and emphasized the situation did not require invoking the Taft-Hartley law.

President Phil Murray of the Steelworkers accepted the offer promptly, and the steel companies followed along. The board now is at work.

This is in line with the formula proposed in the Administration's defeated Taft-Hartley repeal bill.

Antistrike Firm to Load Hawaii Sugar

Honolulu, July 23 (AP).—Hawaii Stevedores, Ltd., new non-union firm, announced today it would start loading sugar, probably Monday, aboard the Isthmian freighter Steel Flyer.

This will be the first effort to ship sugar—Hawaii's principal crop and industrial mainstay—since stevedores of the CIO International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's union struck May 1.

The strikers call Hawaii Stevedoes, Ltd., a strikebreaking concern. Last Wednesday they raided its headquarters and 19 persons were injured. Fourteen strikers have been charged with riot or assault.

If the sugar is loaded successfully the next question will be how to sail the ship. Thirty-three of its crew, members of the AFL International Seafarers Union walked off when nonunion unloading began last week.

Meanwhile, the striking longshoremen again appealed to President Truman to end the dock tieup "on its merits."

Their appeal echoed a Washington request by Senator Morse (R., Oreg.), who told the Senate yesterday the strike may spread to the world's major ports.

The union asked Mr. Truman to name a board of inquiry with authority to settle the paralyzing deadlock. Similar requests for a presidential board of arbitration were made by the union and Morse June 27.

Honolulu Police Chief Named in Hawaii Suit

Honolulu, July 23 (U.P.).—Police Chief Dan Liu and four other policemen were sued for $10,000 damages today by a striking CIO longshoreman who claimed he was held without charge 27 hours after Wednesday's violence in a stevedoring company yard.

The International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union legal staff said the suit was a test case of the law allowing police to hold persons 48 hours on suspicion of a felony.

Black Formals Abolished

Managua, Nicaragua, July 23 (U.P.).—A presidential decree today abolished the use of black formal clothes for men on state occasions. It prescribed instead white attire as more in accord with the tropical climate.

Rodmen Set To Strike Here

the following firms as having accepted the union's terms:

The Fred Drew Construction Co., S. D. Moses, Spidell and Hall, Inc.; E. P. Knollman Co., Kirk Lindsey, Whiting and Turner, Morris Cafritz, William Keller, Standard Construction Co., Joseph Spagne, Inc.

These concerns have also agreed to improving the travel allowance for the rodmen, according to Boyd. Under the old contract, the rodmen traveling out of Washington received 2½ cents a mile. The new agreements provides for 2½ cents a mile travel money up to 40 miles; but if the job is more than 40 miles from Washington—such as at Fredericksburg or Front Royal—the rodmen will get $3 extra a day for subsistence.

It has been some 10 years since the rodmen have struck against the construction industry in this area.

The dump truck drivers, numbering around 200, have been working under a contract which expired March 31, giving them from $1.18 to $1.43 an hour. They have asked for 32 cents an hour, but have indicated they might accept 22 cents. The Dump Truck Operators Association has offered an increase of 10 cents, but rejected a suggestion by its negotiating committee that 17 cents be offered the drivers.

The ready-mix drivers, also around 200, are now getting $1.35 an hour and are asking 15 cents more, after originally seeking a 30-cent raise. The employers have offered a nickel. This group, affiliated like the dump-truck drivers with Local 639, AFL Teamsters, is planning to meet early this week to set a strike deadline date.

Truman Relaxes On Leisurely Potomac Cruise

President Truman relaxed aboard the yacht Williamsburg yesterday on a leisurely cruise down the Potomac River into Chesapeake Bay.

The yacht lifted anchor at 10 a. m. off Blakiston Island in the lower Potomac where the presidential party stayed Friday night. It put in at the Naval Air Station on the Patuxent River at 2 p. m. and remained over last night.

Mr. Truman busied himself briefly with state papers but for the most part relaxed with the other two members of the party, his daughter Margaret and Naval Aide Rear Admiral Robert L. Dennison. Mrs. Truman is spending the summer in Independence, Mo.

Mr. Truman will return to Washington this afternoon.

Cabbies Turn Detectives

Newark, N. J., July 23 (U.P.).—Police announced today that 1000 taxi drivers have agreed to act as "private eyes" in apprehending wanted criminals. Pictures and descriptions of wanted men will be sent to all cab companies and drivers will scrutinize all passengers and passers-by.

Recalls Horse Cars

Too Hot to Be 100, Woman Of 100 Says

MRS. JANE REANEY
. . . in teens when Lincoln died

Mrs. Jane Olivia Reaney, after a century of living, thinks it is almost too hot to celebrate her 100th birthday on Tuesday.

"I never thought I'd live to be a hundred," says the handsome Alexandria woman, who lives at 1215 Powhatan st.

"It's awful hot weather to have a birthday, though," she sighed yesterday.

"It's too hot to have so many interviews, too," she chided but went on obligingly to reminisce about the first horse cars, which she remembers, and the day of Lincoln's death.

Listens to Commentators

"I was grieved," she recalls. "I'd read so much about him."

Mrs. Reaney, up and around as usual yesterday, wore a blue and white seersucker dress. She reads the papers with a magnifying glass, and fills in the day with radio news commentators and broadcast church services.

"She really keeps up with the society news better than my wife and I do," says her son, Arthur F. Reaney, assistant post engineer at Fort McNair.

An avid follower of the English royal family, Mrs. Reaney takes a particular interest in Princess Elizabeth's baby Charles. "I do hope that he'll be made the Prince of Wales," she worries.

Baltmorie-born Mrs. Reaney was Jane Olivia King before she was married to the Rev. William L. Reaney, then a student at the Virginia Theological Seminary in Alexandria.

Pastorates Changed

Texas, Georgia and North Carolina were her home at variouse times, as her husband's pastorates changed. The last he held before his death in 1908 was in Washington at the Church of the Ascension.

Besides her son, with whom she lives, Mrs. Reaney has a daughter, Mrs. J. A. Murphy, 75 Observatory Circle, wife of the retired assistant District health officer. Eight grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren complete the immediate family, many of whom will be on hand to help her celebrate at an open house on Tuesday.

As for a new dress for the occasion Mrs. Reaney pooh-poohs the idea.

"I've got more pretty dresses than I can wear as it is," she sniffs.

Union Decries U. S. Steel's Pension Plan

Pittsburgh, July 23 (AP).—The CIO United Steelworkers today charged that best wishes are most U. S. Steel Corp. employes can expect in the way of pensions.

The union disclosed details of its demands for a $150-a-month pension on voluntary retirement at 65. It said the plan would cost about 6.15 cents per hour per employe, after tax savings and "other economies." The union disclosed also its insurance-program demand would cost the corporation 4.84 cents, or a total of 10.99 cents.

In addition, the union seeks an unspecified general wage increase from U. S. Steel and other steel companies.

A booklet entitled "Pension Plan and Social Insurance Documents," prepared for use in contract negotiations, said:

"The sole reward to which employes of the U. S. Steel Corp. can now look forward to in return for a lifetime of service is a letter expressing a hope for 'the best of health' and that 'retirement years will be many and enjoyable'—only that and nothing more.

"A healthy, enjoyable and long retirement is hardly possible on the incomes available to the retired employes of U. S. Steel."

The booklet is based on a survey made by insurance consultant Murray Latimer. It said "Big Steel's present pension plan averages less than $6 a month and that pensions 'will disappear for the rank and file . . . within a few years."

Refusal of U. S. Steel and other producers to grant union demands led to a strike threat July 16. A walkout was averted by both sides' acceptance of President Truman's proposal to have a fact-finding board look into the dispute. The strike deadline has been moved back to September 14.

George Urges Repeal of War Excise Taxes

By The Associated Press

All-out repeal of wartime excise taxes at this session of Congress was urged yesterday by Senator George (D., Ga.). He said it would stimulate business and employment.

George, ranking Senate tax expert as chairman of its Finance Committee, told reporters that the special wartime taxes could be wiped out at once if President Truman and Congress cooperate.

He referred to taxes now collected on sales of furs, railroad and airline tickets, most jewelry, and a long list of other items.

He said his repeal proposal would not cover the permanent Federal excise taxes on such products as liquor, cigarettes and tobacco.

George said removal of the wartime levies would mean a loss of about 1½ billion dollars in present Government revenues.

But the Senate leader said the step would lead to higher Federal income tax payments from corporations, individuals and other taxpayers and partially offset the tax loss.

He said that the taxes now are causing unemployment and shutdowns in a number of industries and specialty lines. If this trend can be halted and reversed, George said, the savings in Federal relief costs might be tremendous."

Previously George and most Democrats on his committee voted against a partial removal of the wartime excise taxes sponsored by Senator Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.) and most Republicans.

2-Cent Rise Reported by U. S. In Buying Power of Dollar

By the United Press

The Labor Department said yesterday that falling prices have increased the purchasing power of the dollar almost two cents since last September.

The department stated this is the most substantial gain for the consumer since the postwar price rise began three years ago. Although the dollar buying power still is 16 cents below June, 1946, the last month of wartime price controls.

The department's computation was made on the basis of the consumer price index made public last Friday. It showed that the dollar in terms of 1939 prices bought 59 cents worth of goods and services in June, 1949.

Last September, at the peak of the rise in living costs the dollar bought 57.3 cents worth of goods and services in terms of 1939 prices. In June, 1948, the dollar's purchasing power was 58.2 cents.

In June, 1946, the dollar bought 75 cents worth of goods and services in terms of 1939 prices.

Department records show that factory workers had almost $10 more per week in their pay envelopes in May of this year than in June of 1946. Their average weekly earnings in June, 1946, were $43.31, and in May, 1949, last month for which data was available, $53.08.

The issues of living costs, prices and earning will be one of the major items to be investigated by President Truman's fact-finding panel in the steel wage dispute. The panel will meet Tuesday in New York to set up its scheduled hearings which begin next Thursday.

The issue is in dispute also in the soft coal wage negotiations, scheduled to be resumed Tuesday at White Sulphur Springs and Bluefield, W. Va.

Unions in steel, coal, automobile and other basic industries have demanded a fourth postwar round of pay raises this year.

Way Proposed To Put U. S. on Easy Street

New York, July 23 (U.P.).—The average American family income can be boosted by 1960 to $80 a week, half of all children can be sent to college, and every slum in the country can be cleared, a report by an authoritative economic research bureau said today.

The Twentieth Century Fund declared those goals could be realized merely by stepping up by 8 per cent in the next 10 years the normal output which can be expected from the economy of the United States.

The Twentieth Century Fund is a foundation for scientific research and public education, engaged only in current economic studies.

The report said that, on the basis of past performances, it can be expected that the United States will put 39 billion dollars into needed capital goods by 1960. If that amount is increased by only six billion dollars, the country can "abolish want and hunger and bring every human being up to minimum living standards or above."

It said such an increase would: (1) Raise the average annual family income from the $2800 of 1940 to $4000 in 1960, with a shorter work week. (2) Send every child through high school and half the children through at least two years of college. (3) Assure every American of adequate medical care. (4) Provide every family with a "decent' comfortable home." (5) Enrich the country with irrigation, stop soil erosion and reclaim millions of acres of marsh land.

5 Shooting Arrests Make Cohen Laugh

Held in Contempt

Top Kluxer Out on $500 In Alabama

Birmingham, Ala., July 23 (AP).—Alabama's top Klansman, William Hugh Morris, tonight was released from jail on $500 bond.

The director of the Federated Ku Klux Klans, Inc., had been in jail for contempt. He was sentenced July 7, when he refused to bring Klan records before a grand jury.

He was released tonight on agreeing he would make an effort to find the records which he has claimed have been stolen.

Earlier today, Morris failed to win release on the ground that the records had been stolen and he could not bring them in. In another development, a grand jury charged a minister with three masked floggings.

The minister, R. C. Lyons, 47, is the eighteenth man indicted in the State's campaign against hooded lashers. All are out on bond.

Lyons, in jail since Tuesday on a warrant, was charged by one flogging victim with praying over him just before the lash was applied.

Los Angeles, July 23 (U.P.).—Five underworld night life figures in California's two big cities were nabbed today as suspects in the Mickey Cohen ambush shooting and the dapper bookie king promptly laughed them off as "unimportant."

Within 12 hours from the time of their pickups in Los Angeles and San Francisco, four had been freed, leaving only mobster Tony Brancato, 34, from Kansas and Missouri, booked in Los Angeles on suspicion of attempted murder in the fusillade that dropped Cohen and three companions on the Sunset Strip Wednesday morning.

Sought was former convict Anthony Trombino, pal of Brancato. They were named by California Attorney General Fred N. Howser as two of three men possibly involved in the shooting.

Picked up at a San Francisco night club in the wee hours this morning and held "on suspicion of complicity in the Cohen shooting" until released late today were:

1. Jimmy Tarantino, 38, publisher of a magazine called Hollywood Nightlife, which has editorially attacke dthe city administration in both Los Angeles and San Francisco.

2. Joe Tenner, 49, former convict with a sentence served in Walla Walla, Wash., for pandering. He is a one-time night club owner and currently an "advertising salesman" for Tarantino's magazine. He once was a popular songwriter, publishing "Why Don't You Come Home, Honey" and "Baby Be Mine" and co-starred in Ziegfeld Follies and the Follies Bergere from 1922 to 1925.

3 Hy Porter, 28, San Francisco representative handling both advertising and editorial copy for Hollywood Nightlife.

Howser's third "suspect," Joseph E. Messina, 42-year-old Los Angeles barber, was picked up but released when he came up with an alibi for the time when the bullets zipped in Cohen, showgirl Dee David, Cohen henchman Edward (Neddie) Herbert and attorney general's agent Harry Cooper.

From his hospital bed where he is recovering from a bullet wound in his right shoulder, Cohen laughed at the arrests.

"Brancato's not important enough," Cohen said. "Tarantino uses a poison pen, not a gun."

"I know Brancato. He used to work for me. But, hell, he couldn't have done it. He's not important enough."

"I never heard of Messina," he sniffed.

Mickey said Brancato worked for him "in a minor job about three years ago and we parted friends."

Only yesterday, Tarantino had been a bedside visitor of Cohen's.

Late last year Tarantino opened a campaign against the "Hollywood dope trade" and shortly before the Robert Mitchum marijuana case he had hired a detective and bodyguard because of threats he claimed were made on his life.

The short, olive-skinned publisher and his two companions received the "plush" treatment in San Francisco's jail, being allowed to use the telephones and getting special breakfasts instead of the ordinary jail fare of oatmeal.

"My arrest this morning was a revenge arrest," he said. "It was the police department's way of getting even with me and I think it was a very unsportsmanlike way to treat an editor."

The arrests of Tarantino and the two others in a Barbary Coast night club in San Francisco were made by Capt. James English and Inspector Frank Lucey, both criticized in his Nightlife columns.

Waiting at the jail when the trio was brought in were Police Chief Michael Mitchell, and Police Commissioners J. Warnock Walsh and Henry C. Maginn.

When Nightlife first opened its San Francisco campaign early this year, Tarantino attacked San Francisco Examiner Columnist "Freddy Francisco" (Bob Patterson), revealing the columnist had a Federal prison record. Francisco ultimately was fired.

Tarantino then took on Robinson, Wren, English and Lucey, charging maladministration in the police department and the city hall.

Before Messina was released he complained that once last week as he was driving his Cadillac near Cohen's haberdashery on the Strip, three carloads of men stopped him, "shook him down" and took the bullets from his gun. "I thought they were sheriff's deputies," he said.

Los Angeles Police Chief William Worton, meantime announced creation of a new police bureau to investigate all charges of misconduct against policemen. The organization was made after reports that some police involved in the investigation of vice and "shakedowns" in the city were "out to get" Cohen.

Girl Hillbilly Sought in Va. 'Hearts' Case

Virginia police searched last night for a female hillbilly, once a Berwyn, Md., trailer camp entertainer, and reportedy one of the contacts of a Nation-wide "lonely hearts lover."

She is Lillian Varney, 22, whose costume picture and letters were among the possessions of Ernest I. Torrence, 57, who was arrested in Wytheville, Va., last Saturday as he fumbled a railroad station pick-up attempt.

Maryland State Police said Miss Varney left the unidentified trailer camp last April or March, ostensibly to get married. No one could be found in Berwyn who has heard from her since.

In addition to the Berwyn girl, Virginia police are contacting a long list of other women in "almost every State" whose letters were found on Torrence.

Captain E. J. McDermott in Wytheville, head of the State Police's Fourth District, said last night, "We found a couple of the women already. One of them said she had lost her life-savings of $14,000 and another reported losing $2500."

"This Berwyn girl, she was evidently trying to get him to act as her agent, and get her bookings all over the country," McDermott said.

Torrence, a man with more than five aliases, has been charged with grand larceny and embezzlement, and is being held on bail of $25,000, which, McDermott said, would be raised in answer to a request by Commonwealth's attorney, B. G. Goad, of Hillsville, Va.

Other women whose letters were found on Torrence when he was arrested include residents of Roanoke and Salem, McDermott said.

War Dog Walks 2000 Miles to Be With Master

Seattle, July 23 (AP).—Schultz, a German shepherd war dog, apparently walked some 2000 miles from Wakarusa, Ind., to Seattle to be with his owner.

The home-loving dog turned up at a Seattle housing development and was turned over to his owner, Pfc. Richard B. Anthony, who is stationed near here.

Anthony shipped the dog to his mother about three weeks ago, because Schultz couldn't get along with "Blackie," the mascot at the Marine base where Anthony is stationed.

His mother wrote him that Schultz escaped about July 1.

Schultz was in good shape on arrival here, except that his toenails were worn down.

Father Jailed for Beating Son; Boy Treated for Face Bruises

Beverly P. Davis, jr., 35, unemployed father of three, was charged with cruelty to his 10-year-old son and drunkenness yesterday, after his wife told police he was giving the child "an unmerciful beating."

Davis

Little Bobby Davis was taken to Walter Reed Hospital by police of the Sixth Precinct, treated for face and nose bruises, cuts and welts, and was released.

Mrs. Anna Lee Davis, a switchboard operator at Walter Reed, told police her husband started beating the child at approximately 1 p. m. in their home at 711 Tuckerman st. nw.

Davis attacked the boy with a leather belt, according to police, and beat him about the face and arms until Mrs. Davis rescued him, took him to the home of her mother, Mrs. Alice Johnson, at 728 Somerset pl., and called police.

The Davises also have a 6-year-old child and one 14 months old.

Davis was arrested and taken to the Sixth Precinct Station and jailed. Representatives of the Women's Bureau questioned Mrs. Davis for two hours. She signed the complaint against her husband and said she wanted to prosecute.

Army, Air Force Now Legally Untied

The last legal ties between the Army and Air Force have been cut, but it took two years and 40 orders to do it.

Defense Secretary Johnson announced yesterday he had signed "Transfer Order No. 40," assigning to the now completely independent United States Air Force all functions and powers not included under previous orders.

NLRB Declines to Act

title to their family home on Reynolds Mountain, near Asheville.

In addition to Reynolds and the child, others who hold an interest in the property are Reynolds' adult daughter by a previous marriage and a grandson of Reynolds.

The property, consisting of buildings and 141 acres of land, has been appraised at between $70,000 and $80,000. The value of the various interests in the property has not yet been determined.

Reynolds, if the child gets full title by purchase, proposes to use her money to build an $8500 addition to the 12-room main house and to purchase 16 additional acres for its water supply for $5000 more.

Reynolds contends his income is between $10,000 and $12,000 annually after taxes, but that he has been spending more than $20,000 of his own money annually, mostly to support the child.

In recommending Reynolds' wishes be carried out, O'Donoghue said:

"On the whole, this guardian was very much impressed with the advantages of Asheville and the residence on Reynolds Mountain as a home for Mamie Spears Reynolds and is inclined to agree with Senator Reynolds that is a far preferable and healthier environment for a young girl of extreme wealth to grow up in than the atmosphere of a big city such as Washington or New York."

When reached by a reporter, O'Donoghue declined to amplify this comparison other than to say, "After all, I live in Washington."

The lawyer did say, however, that he found the estate very attractive with an "unparalleled" view. It has an orchard of 3500 apple trees, he said, and many other desirable features.

One disadvantage is that the layout of the house is such that Mamie must share her bedroom with a governess. The proposed addition will remedy this, O'Donoghue said.

Also, he said, there is an "undesirable development" of dilapidated frame houses at the base of the mountain. Luckily, this is shielded from the view from the hilltop by a stand of timber, the court was told.

O'Donoghue spent some time talking to Mamie herself and reported back:

"While his ward is, of course, to young to understand the issues here presented, this guardian could see at once that she is a happy little girl, attractive and well mannered, healthy and well adjusted in her home life."

She takes swimming lessons, has a pony to ride, and likes her school, St. Genevieve's, in The Pines.

O'Donoghue said he was impressed with the "thought and sound judgment which Senator Reynolds had given to the education, welfare and future of his little daughter."

The lawyer could see no ulterior motive in Reynolds' asking that the girl buy the property.

"The obvious and only significant personal advantage . . . will lie in the fact . . . he would continue to live in the home owned by his daughter, presumably rent free," O'Donoghue said.

He added that the ordinary expenses of maintaining the home and in care of his daughter will continue to be paid by Reynolds.

the precinct before his recent transfer.

"I've known him since we were motorcycle men together in 1928," Captain Fondahl said. "He's really missed at No. 8. He never was a spectacular officer. He was quiet and always inclined to give any person a break, if he could. If it was necessary to make an arrest, he made it, but more often, he used diplomacy to iron out trouble. That"s why so many people knew and liked him."

Appointed in 1917

Appointed to the Police Department March 13, 1917, Lieutenant Redman has served in several precincts. Until his transfer to headquarters on July 1, he served at the Eighth Precinct for about 15 years.

His record shows four commendations during his 32 years of service. He began as a bicycle patrolman, was made a sergeant on April 1, 1929, and a lietuenant on February 16, 1933. His fifty-ninth birthday would have been Tuesday.

Lieutenant Redman is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mary E. Redman, and three sons, William Redman and Louis Redman of Washington, and Dr. Charles Redman, attached to the Atomic Energy Commission at Chicago.

Rep. Miller Impressed By How Organization Can Stir Congressmen

The talk of Congress is how the postal unions blasted the Miller bill to benefit their members right out of the House Postoffice and Civil Service Committee. That spectacular action, its author believes, should be an object lesson to the great mass of unorganized classified workers.

Representative Miller (D., Calif.) had these comments after 218 of his colleagues signed the Walsh petition to discharge the committee from further consideration of his measure:

"It merely goes to show what organization can do . . . It's splendid evidence of what it means to have a powerful group speak for you . . . Postal employes are organized and they are aggressive. They visited members of the House to explain the bill and to urge their representatives to support it. They wrote letters by the basketful to demand action on their bill and they got action. In contrast, very little has been done about the bills to help classified employes because the classified employes haven't organized to help themselves."

Nevertheless, Miller doesn't intend to ignore classified and other unorganized employes. He looks on his postal pay-reclassification bill as one of a series of much-needed measures to bring the many Federal pay systems up to date.

His bill to raise the salaries of Government executives already has House approval. He has a bill in to reclassify and to raise the salaries of the 850,000 classified employes, and he readily admits that postmasters and supervisors need to have their salaries adjusted.

The Miller postal bill is scheduled to be called up in the House August 8. Its approval seems assured, since a majority of House members have indorsed it. And they are supporting it, incidentally, despite opposition of the Administration. Postmaster General Donaldson is on record as flatly opposing the Miller bill unless postal revenues are raised to offset its estimated 250-million-dollar annual cost.

But there are reports the Administration may do an about-face and indorse several features of the Miller bill. A new report on it is being drafted for White House approval.

This is certain—that the White House will insist on pay adjustments for classified as well as postal employes, although it won't specify a figure for either group. The President repeatedly has asked Congress to approve his plan to reclassify Federal salaries, a proposal that would raise the average classified salary about $50 year.

The Long subcommittee of the Senate Postoffice and Civil Service Committee has boosted the President's plan to make the average raise about $125 a year. In the House, the Administration bill is sponsored by Chairman Murray, who now is in the mood to liberalize it to give the classified worker a higher average pay boost.

Murray agrees with the Administration position that flat pay raises distort the classification systems of both postal and classified employes, and furthermore, that there should be no favorite group in Government; that Uncle Sam should give equal treatment to all his employes.

If the House approves the Miller bill, you can depend on Murray to bring in a bill to give similar benefits to classified workers. His committee will continue to hold hearings on the 75 pay bills before it, the way it has for the past several months.

On the Senate side, pay-raise strategists can't agree on a line of attack. Half a dozen different proposals have been discussed and discarded over the past several days.

In some respects, the situation there is the opposite of that in the House. The Long subcommittee, for example, tentatively has approved a classified bill more liberal than its measure for postal employes. And there is a good reason for it:

A few minutes before the Eightieth Congress passed into history a year ago, a bill was approved to give postal employes a flat raise of $450 and classified employes only $330—a $120 differential for postal people.

Members of Congress who wrote the compromise promised on that weary night to pass a bill to reclassify salaries of classified employes and to give most of them a new pay raise in the process. Several Senators now are insisting the promise be carried out.

As a result, the postal bill as now written would provide a flat $100 wage boost and abolish the first two postal grades to make the starting salary $2750 for clerks and carriers. The bill would cost 61 million a year compared to 250 million for the House bill.

On the other hand, the bill for classified workers would give them an average raise of $125, plus other benefits. However, the power of the postal group is beginning to be felt in the Senate, too. There is good reason to believe an attempt will be made to whittle down the classified bill and to write in additional benefits for postal employes. If that happens, unfortunately only mild and ineffective protests will be made by the unorganized and voiceless classified workers. Congress, it seems, listens only to organized demands; justice is a secondary consideration.

26 Seized In 6 Raids By District Vice Squad

Gambling, Liquor Law Violations And Vagrancy Among Charges

Twenty-six persons were arrested in a series of six raids by the police vice squad in a 17-hour period ending yesterday.

Gambling charges were placed against five of those arrested; liquor law violations against five; liquor and gambling against one; disorderly house operation and vagrancy against two; vagrancy against two; and disorderly conduct against 12.

Lieut. Roy Blick, head of the squad, said that the forays were "just routine" and not connected with a recent changeover in handling of vice cases in the department ordered by Maj. Robert Barrett, superintendent of police.

Two Turn Up Moonshine

Two of the raids, Lieutenant Blick said, turned up "corn" moonshine whisky, which he said was being sold in one place for $1.25 a half pint. This is more than the price of half pints of a number of brands of legal whisky.

These sales, he said, were made in a house at 78 Logan ct. nw., where raiders arrested William H. Carter, 52. Blick said an undercover man had made a purchase of the liquor. A quantity of it was confiscated and Carter was charged under the internal revenue law with keeping untaxed whisky. He was held by United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence in $1000 bond for action of the grand jury.

Held Under $500 Bond

At 1303 7th st. nw., second floor, Preston Pannel, 35, and Lulu Thomas, 47, were arrested on charges of operating a disorderly house and vagrancy. Municipal Court Judge Thomas D. Quinn held them under $500 bond for a jury trial on September 6. Also arrested in that raid were Juanita Thomas, 25, of the same address, and Buella Thompson, 29, 832 3d st. sw. They were charged with vagrancy. Six "customers" were booked on disorderly conduct charges and elected to forfeit $5 collateral each.

Those two raids were Friday night. Early yesterday, the vice squad men went to the second floor of 1306 9th st nw., where they arrested Steve T. Early, 27, of that address, and Loretta Daniels, 24, of 2326½ Georgia ave. nw. on charges of keeping and selling whisky without a license. Commissioner Lawrence set $500 bond each on them and continued the cases to August 26.

In the next raid, Joe Hanna, 41, was arrested at 204 New York ave. nw. Lieutenant Blick said a quantity of "corn moonshine" was found there. Hanna was charged with keeping and selling whisky without a license and keeping untaxed liquor. Bond was set at $1500 by Commissioner Lawrence and the case continued to August 26.

At 2:15 a. m., the raiders visited the Harlan Social Club, in the basement at 1555 9th st. nw. They had a warrant for James M. Franklin, 1634 Covington st. nw., for keeping and selling whiskey without a license. When they arrived, Lieutenant Blick said, they found two slot machines in operation, so they also charged Franklin with setting up a gaming table. Six of the 12 customers in the place were booked for disorderly conduct, and elected to forfeit $5 collateral each.

Counting Numbers Receipts

At 1:30 p. m. yesterday, Lieutenant Blick said, members of his squad walked into a place they had been watching in the basement of 1310 9th st. nw. Five persons there, Blick said, were in the process of counting the day's receipts from numbers slips. About $500 was seized and the five charged with operating a lottery and possession of numbers slips. They were Maurice O. Sutton, 40, 1320 6th st. nw.; Miranda Washington, 46, 927 N st. nw.; Joseph W. Barns, 32, of 28 T st. nw.; Forrest McAbee, 29, 1241 1st st. nw.; and William A. White, 35, 1439 T st. nw. Bond was set at $1500 each on them.

4 Area Interns Commissioned in Medical Reserve

Four Washington area interns have been commissioned first lieutenants in the Army Medical Corps Reserve as part of the Army's Civilian Intern Program, the Surgeon General announced yesterday.

The Washington area doctors who began their internships July 1 are: A. H. Kiracofe, 807 Otis pl. nw., St. Elizabeths Hospital; Thomas F. Blake, 3215 Terrace dr. se., Gallinger Hospital; P. S. Grant, 1506 N. Scott st., Arlington, Gallinger Hospital; and D. A. P. Smith, 3601 Connecticut ave. nw., Providence Hospital.

They were among 255 recent medical school graduates who were enrolled in the Civilian Intern Program, a new setup designed to interest young physicians in the regular Army Medical Corps.

Under the program, the doctors will serve with either the Army or Air Corps Medical Corps after completion of their internship, and may compete for specialty training in the Military Residency Program.

6 Swimming Pools Used By 195,000

Despite the three-weeks closing of one pool, a total of 195,000 persons used the six District swim pools through July 15, Government Services, Inc., disclosed yesterday.

Of the total—an estimated 6000 more than for the same period a year ago, 120,000 were paid admissions, and 75,000 were free.

Swimming instruction tests were given 399 boys and girls and passed by them, compared with 420 for the period last summer.

Assistance by lifeguards was given 245 persons, of which but three required actual medical attention.

Inspections by the District Health Department found the pools in satisfactory condition GSI reported.

The Anacostia pool was closed June 29 after racial disturbances occurred.

GSI Awaiting Results on Tests Of Poison Cake

Government Services, Inc., is awaiting results of chemical analysis of the chocolate cake served in its cafeterias Friday and believed responsible for the illness of a dozen customers.

The tests are being made by the District Health Department and results are expected early next week.

Those treated for food poisoning (none were reported seriously ill) had eaten the cake in the cafeterias at the Engraving Bureau branch and an FBI branch.

Robert R. Ayers, GSI general manager, said 320 orders of the cake had been served in the Engraving Bureau branch and that the same type of cake had been served in 19 cafeterias altogether.

Pay Hike Backed For Gallinger Anesthetists

Civil Service reclassification of Gallinger Hospital anesthetists to increase their salaries has been approved by the District Personnel Board, Commissioner Guy Mason said yesterday.

The Commissioner declared that it is impossible for the hospital to keep anesthetists at present salaries paid.

Under the proposal the chief anesthetist could be raised from a salary of $6235 to $8510 and be placed in charge of a department.

Nurse anesthetists now receiving $3727 would be given a salary of $4480.

Housing Law To Set Limit On Tenants

Draft of Proposed D. C. Code Directed At Elimination of Slums Is Started

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

The District's proposed new housing and sanitation code will limit the number of tenants in rental housing.

Commissioner Guy Mason said yesterday that he and the other Commissioners have reached the conclusion that any new code must have such a provision if Washington is to do an adequate job of cleaning up its slums.

Code Draft Ordered

The Health Department has been told to draft new regulations, and prepare legislation for submission to the next Congress if congressional approval is required, Mason stated. The work will be done by Col William H. Cary, jr., head of the Bureau of Public Health Engineering.

The proposed code, Mason said, will reduce overcrowding by setting a standard for the number of persons that may occupy a rented home in relation to the space.

The District now has control over rooming houses through its licensing power, but cannot limit the number of occupants in other housing.

Overcrowding a Menace

Overcrowding is considered by the Health Department to be a greater disease menace here than insanitary conditions.

Cary said the code probably will set up minimum sanitation standards, including requirements for inside toilets and water facilities. The city now has an estimated 9000 to 10,000 outside toilets, and 15,000 outdoor water hydrants.

Cary explained he is making a careful study of Baltimore codes, basis of the Baltimore plan for block by block slum clearance.

When G. Yates Cook, chief of the Baltimore Health Department housing division, toured District slums early in June he indicated to the Commissioners that the District would have to strengthen its housing code before it could set up a similar plan.

Action Delayed

Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young proposed a new code to close gaps in present regulations.

Mason said that seven years ago the Washington Housing Association proposed a comprehensive housing code, but that the Commissioners turned it down because it invaded the privacy of homes.

The District was unable to proceed with any program during the war and in postwar years because of shortages of building materials, Mason said.

"There no longer is any excuse," he declared.

A factor in adoption of a new code, he indicted, is the National Housing Act, which will provide low cost housing for displaced tenants.

2 Restaurant Hearings Set by ABC This Week

Hearings on complaints against two restaurants for alleged violations of alcoholic beverage control regulations will be held this week by the ABC Board.

Monday at 10 a. m. the board will hear charges of not operating a bona fide restaurant lodged against Theodore J. Scheve and William Schaefer, trading as Brinkley's, 533 8th st. se.

Wednesday at 10 a. m. Miriam B. Barrett, operator of the Golden Glow Restaurant, 741 13th st. nw., is to answer charges of "not true and actual ownership."

Doleful Look for Some Skinks . . .

CARGO FOR DENMARK—"How about a couple of these, Molly?" asks Buster Keaton of Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer, who is leaving by plane for Denmark today and taking along some of these little fellows. Dr. William Mann, head of the Washington Zoo, is sending along several water dragons, a couple of turtles, a few giant bullfrogs and a half dozen blue-tongued skinks as a present to the Copenhagen Zoo. It's anybody's guess what he'll get in return. The famed film comedian, who helped get the pets ready yesterday, is closing a week's appearance in "Three Men on a Horse" at the Meridian Hill Park Theater tonight

District Tops Bond Quota by $4½ Million

The District went $4,500,000 over its 12-million-dollar quota in series E bonds in the recently completed savings bond drive, it was announced yesterday.

Commenting on the huge oversubscription, Thomas J. Groom, chairman of the District saving bonds division, said:

"The support received is a testimonial to the wisdom of Americans who fully understand that while the individual is building economic security for himself through savings bonds, he is, at the same time, making a valuable contribution to the national economy."

Federal employes led all other groups in bond purchases. They accounted for more than half of all sales. The Federal employes were grouped in the interdepartmental savings bond committee, headed by Edward F. Bartelt, fiscal Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Significant of the response was the fact of the women's section, headed by Mrs. Lindsey P. Rawley, which, in final tabulations, is expected to more than double its million-dollar quota.

Praise was given by Groom to various business, professional and entertainment groups for their work in making the drive a success.

Among them he noted advertisers, including department stores and specialty shops, banks and building and loan associations, newspapers, radio and television stations, District Commissioners, Metropolitan Police and National Capital Parks.

He cited the International Harvester Co., Freuhauf Trailer Co., and the motion-picture industry for the Covered Wagon that toured the District.

Results of the drive indicated that District sales were 1.18 per cent of the national total of $1,216,000,000.

Accidental Shot

Gun Wound Is Fatal to Laurel Boy

Harry Luther Dixon, jr., 16, of Montgomery rd., Laurel, Md., died at George Washington University Hospital yesterday of a bullet wound in the head.

The wound, authorities said, was accidentally inflicted last Wednesday evening by the boy's 15-year-old uncle, Gilbert Luther Brady, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Brady, Cedar le., Beltsville, Md. The shooting occurred in the Brady home.

Death came despite the efforts of surgeons who Thursday night removed Harry's shattered left eye and then conducted a delicate operation to cleanse the wound through the left side of his brain from the eye to the back of the head.

After the shooting, Gilbert was released in custody of his parents by Prince Georges County Police and they said then no action was contemplated. Pvt. Earl J. Huber of that police force said after Harry's death last night that he will discuss the case Monday with the State's attorney's office, but did not indicate any action will be taken.

Gilbert Brady recounted circumstances of the mishap last night.

"There had been prowlers around here a lot," he said. "Last winter, I fired the gun in the air once to frighten them off. We think it's someone that knows the layout around here and came back last Saturday night.

"Tuesday night, Harry and I and my brother Millard, who is 12, waited up. I had the gun. It's my father's. I had loaded it. We didn't hear the prowlers.

"Afterward, I unloaded it, or I thought I did.

"Wednesday night we three were standing in the living room, each looking out a window. I had the gun. I pulled the trigger a couple of times and nothing happened but a click. Then Harry came across the room to get a snapshot. I pulled the trigger again and it fired."

Harry was taken at first to Leland Memorial Hospital at Riverdale, Md., and attended by Dr. J. J. Weinstein. The next day he was trnasferred to George Washington University Hospital, and that night Drs. W. P. Chalfonte and Dr. J. M. Williams, assisted by Dr. Weinstein, performed the delicate surgery.

The body was taken to the District Morgue. Funeral services have not yet been arranged.

Soil Conservation Called Important to Urbanites, Too

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The city dweller has as great a stake in soil conservation as the farmer, Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer of the District of Columbia told the Southern Maryland Soil Conservation Tour yesterday.

Soil conservation in Maryland, Seckinger said, has three important targets:

1. To halt continued destruction of the soil that furnishes food, clothing and shelter.

2. To prevent pollution of streams from which cities get their water.

3. To stop silting of coastal waterways, with disastrous effects on the fisheries industry and on shipping.

"For every man, woman and child, a good diet, quantitatively is not sufficient," Seckinger told the closing meeting of the tour in Charles County.

"In America there is no lack of food, but many years of continuous cropping of our farm lands, with the resultant removal of practically all the natural elements of the soil, is causing hidden hunger or mineral deficiency in ever-increasing and alarming proportions.

"The major source of the mineral elements essential to man is the food he consumes, which comes from the land. Some of the minerals come from the rocks out of which the soil was formed and some out of the sea from the excreta or remains of animals, shellfish, etc. Continuous cropping has worked out many of these elements.

"Absence of trace elements are known to cause serious deficiency and illness. The lack of iodine may cause goiter; cobalt, Anemia; phosphorous, degeneration of active body tissue; magnesium, nervous disorders, etc."

A row between two agencies of the Agriculture Department, the Extension Service and the Soil Conservation Service, smoldering all week, broke out again at the morning session yesterday.

As the group inspected the J. Anthony Hunt farm, P. D. Brown, county agent for Charles County, said soil conservation in his county was due "90 per cent to the farmers and 10 per cent to Government agencies."

"If the bureaucrats will keep out of our hair," Brown declared, "we can accomplish real soil conservation."

Brown gave chief credit for the success of the week-long tour to the local "soil supervisors" aided, he said, by the Extension Service and technicians from the Soil Conservation Service.

Yesterday's farm visits in Charles County ended the 5-day soil conservation tour, covering also the counties of Prince Georges, Anne Arundel, Calvert and St. Marys. A similar tour, taking in Southern Maryland farms operated by Negroes, is planned for September.

Heat Hints

6. Sunburn's best preventive is commonsense. Sun lotions help some by blocking out burning rays.

Most sunburn easers on the market have some value, but for blistered cases avoid those with local anesthetics. Mild sunburn yields well to cold tea compresses which not only take out the sting but help the protective tanning process.

In severe cases, see your doctor as you would for any bad burn.

Civic, Labor Groups to Push Living Theater

A Civic-Labor Committee to support the "living theater," was organized here yesterday.

The group held its first meeting in the board room of the American Security & Trust Co., at 15th and Pa. ave. nw.

Purpose of the committee is to "sponsor the movement for restoration of the legitimate theater to the National Capital and to encourage worthy efforts in this direction."

An immediate objective is support of the Washington Theater Festival, offering professional dramatic productions this summer at Meridian Hill Park and welcomed by the committee "as the first concrete accomplishment toward the establishment of a permanent theater in Washington."

Elected as co-chairman of the committee are Leon Chatelain, architect, and former president of the Board of Trade; C. F. Preller, president of Washington Central Labor Union, and Thomas P. Morgan, jr., member of the District Boxing Commission.

Col. Campbell C. Johnson, assistant to the National Director of Selective Service, was named vice chairman. Miss Sylvia Altman, director of information and research of the Washington Central Labor Union, was named executive chairman.

Mrs. Perkins Is Elected by Legion Women

Mrs. Rose Perkins of 5059 Sherier pl. nw., last night was elected unanimously and installed president of the D. C. Department, American Legion Auxiliary, at the close of the organization's twenty-fourth annual convention in the Commerce Department Auditorium.

A member of the auxiliary's police and fire unit, Mrs. Perkins succeeds Mrs. J. Florence Dietsche of the Treasury unit. Mrs. Dietsche automatically will become national executive committee woman at the end of the Legion Auxiliary's national convention, scheduled for August 28 to September 1 in Philadelphia.

Others Inducted

Others elected without opposition and inducted into office were Mrs. Merle W. Cerulla of Sergeant Jasper Unit, Mrs. Pearl D. Chapman of the James Reese Europe Unit, Mrs. Ida Orr of the General Accounting Office Units, vice presidents; Mrs. Mayme C. Mehlinger of the Samuel E. Walker Unit, historian; Mrs. Mabel Puglisse, Agriculture Department Unit, sergeant-at-arms; Mrs. Ethel S. Wilt, Kenneth H. Nash Unit, chaplain.

Still others installed were Mrs. Marie Lince of the George Killeen Unit, property custodian; Mrs. Ruth A. Rainey of Bunker Hill Unit, and Mrs. Ann Zaruba of Cooley-McCullough Unit, color bearers.

Mrs. Pearl Heagerty, national historian, was elected permanent chairman of the D. C. Department's building as well as delegate-at-large to the national convention. Mrs. Della Luther was named to a three-year term on the building fund.

National Delegates

Delegates to the national conclave include Mrs. Dietsche, chairman; Mrs. Bertha W. Fitchorn, Mrs. Perkins, Mrs. Ethel Wilt, Mrs. Ida Orr, Mrs. Eileen Noland, Mrs. Loretta Reed, Mrs. Merle W. Cerulla and Mrs. May C. Hillary.

Among the alternate convention delegates named were Mrs. Katherine Clarke, Mrs. Anne Zaruba, Mrs. Roberta Fawcett, Mrs. Margaret Carroll, Mrs. Mabel Pugliese, Mrs. Beulah LaScola, Mrs. Frances Snow and Mrs. Sarah Deery.

'Blind Alley' GI Training Under Probe By District

Chatelain Heads 19 Fact Finders Named for Study By Commissioners

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

What kind of a job is being done by the private schools here giving apprentice training in various trades to GIs, and to what end?

To answer these and other questions, the District Commissioners last week appointed a 19-man fact-finding committee representing employer groups, labor, veterans and the public.

Leon Chatelain, jr., past president of the Washington Board of Trade, has been named chairman, and Gino J. Simi, director of apprenticeship for the District, secretary.

The board will probably study such cases as that of the young man who took a watchmaking course for 18 months at a cost of approximately $900, and then took another six-month course at a cost of approximately $270 tuition.

$2880 Living Expenses

In addition to this total tuition cost of $1170 to the Government, this former GI received $120 a month, or a total of $2880, for living expenses from the Government.

It cost more than $4000 to educate him, and when he finished he could not find a job.

According to a jewelry shop employer, "too many watchmakers are being trained. Opportunities for employment are going to be plenty tough, soon. The field is almost 100 per cent overcrowded.

"The training in many cases is sketchy," he added. "The theory they are taught is good, but when it comes to practical work they flounder."

Others, faced with the same situation, have offered to forget their training and start from scratch.

Shoe Repair in 102 Weeks

A local school offers a 102-week shoe repair course at a total cost of approximately $1400 tuition. The GI would also get his living allowance.

Many are learning shoe repair. Yet the United States Employment Service for the District says there appears to be no present demand for shoe repairmen.

The same is reported true of bricklayers, another apprentice-training course.

The D. C. Apprenticeship Council is receiving "many reports, mostly from veterans who have attended these schools, wanting help in finding jobs, and we are unable to help them," said Simi, secretary to the council.

Indorsing the council's proposal for an investigation, the Washington Building and Construction Trades Council in a letter to the Commissioners said:

"It is apparent that very few of these veterans will be able to find employment on graduation, because during the past two years many graduates of these schools have approached unions, seeking journeyman cards, and tests indicate that none could qualify under minimum union requirements."

2000 Reported Enrolled

The council added, "We understand that some 2000 veterans are enrolled in more than 20 private trade schools for courses of eight to 18 months' duration. Most of these veterans are married and have children, and will be in desperate need of assistance. They will also learn that they have wasted their entitlement and benefits from the Veterans' Administration to no purpose."

The Apprenticeship Council executive committee said that it "has been advised that, during the past three years, more than 1000 veterans have been graduated from these schools in some 20 different apprenticeable trades.

"Personal investigation by council members, their friends, and other interested parties indicate that not more than one in 20 of these GIs are currently employed in work which in any way is remotely related to the training they received in these private schools."

Another point of view is represented by Boise L. Bristor, who investigates the schools for the Board of Education prior to their certification to the VA as approved.

The board checks schools with a set of criteria that includes: the school's purpose, curricula, library service, qualification of teachers, financial condition of the school—to be sure it will continue in operation for the duration of the courses, and safety measures. The board refuses to investigate a school until it is at least six months old.

Requested by Commissioners

It is an extracurricular activity for the board, done in response to a request by the Commissioners in 1945. Officers and teachers of the public school system have given more than 8000 hours of their leisure time to checking the schools, according to Bristor.

"We feel that the trade schools are doing splendid work for the veterans," said Bristor. "The law was written specifically to let the boys take the training they wanted."

If the GIs are feeling aggrieved, they have evidently not carried their complaints to the Better Business Bureau. A spokesman there said, "We have had almost no complaints."

14 D.C. Girl Scouts Camp in England

Fourteen Washington Girl Scouts landed in Bexhill, England, yesterday for a 10-day encampment with their European equivalents, The International Girl Guides.

Including the two daughters of Rep. Richard Wigglesworth, (R., Mass.), Mary, 14, and Ann, 16, the girls are all students or alumnae of Potomac School, 2144 California ave., nw.

They were most impressed with the courtesy displayed by Britain's younger set, the Associated Press reported. Fifty Boy Scouts showed up at the Bexhill station to help the girls with their luggage. The Girl Scouts are the guests of the Bexhill Girl Guides, with whom three corresponded for two years.

Report for Week

9 Die, 165 Hurt in Home Accidents

Infant gourmets in Washington ranged far and wide last week in their search for exotic delicacies, with most of them, as usual, ending up with tummy aches for their pains.

The most original dish of the week, according to the Red Cross weekly home accident survey released today, was a light bulb, raw, munched down by a Washington youngster.

A sister and brother, 2½ and 3½ years old respectively, ate roach powder and wound up in Children's Hospital in serious condition. Other children imbibed coal oil, rubbing alcohol and thyroad tablets with not quite so serious reactions.

It was the most hazardous week in the year with 165 injuries reported, the survey showed. Broken down, there were 60 falls, seven burns, four poisonings, seven foreign objects in eye, throat or stomach, one contusion and 44 were unclassified.

The Bureau of Vital Statistics reported nine deaths from home accidents, bringing the total for the year to 140.

To Oppose Gas Rate Hike

An official of the Restaurant Beverage Association of Washington will oppose a request by the Washington Gas Light Co. for a rate increase at a hearing Thursday at 10 a. m. in the District Building.

Sy Wiener, executive secretary of the organization, said yesterday that he will testify at the hearing. Other opposition is also expected.

Marine Struck By Streetcar in Critical Condition

Pfc. Harold Hopkins, 19, a Marine attached to Edenton (N. C.) Naval Air Station, was in a critical condition last night in Bethesda Naval Hospital, after being struck by a streetcar.

Private Hopkins' skull was fractured when early yesterday he stepped off a loading platform in the 800 block of 14th st. nw., into the path of the streetcar, driven by George W. Hosteler of 3309 Chauncey Pl., Mount Rainier, Md.

Earlier in the day a coroner's jury exonerated Matthew Stepinsky, 37, of 1737 E st. ne., in connection with the traffic death, July 20., of William Meehan, 5, of 1363 Maryland ave. ne.

Young Meehan was struck by a car driven by Stepinsky in the 100 block of G st. ne., and died the same day in Casualty Hospital.

Lawmakers on Air

Representative Chase Going Woodhouse (D., Conn.) and Representative Dayton Phillips (R., Tenn.) will discuss Federal aid for education on a radio program on Station WWDC at 9:15 p. m. today. This will be the third in a series of programs on Federal education aid presented by Ed Hart as moderator.

Budding Rose Experts To Explain Methods

Budding experts of the Potomac Rose Society will give a public demonstration on the proper method of budding roses at 2:30 p. m. next Sunday in the garden of R. E. Scammell, 2810 Bladensburg rd. ne.

The demonstration will be repeated the following Sunday at the Arlington Memorial Gardens, Edison rd., south of Lee Highway.

Years Spanned in Reunion . . .

The Washington Post

TEARS OF HAPPINESS—Al Mann (center), radio newscaster from Amarillo, is greeted on arrival at National Airport by his half-brother, Staff Sergt. Andrew H. Beavers, Alexandria, and his half-sister, Mrs. Dorothy B. Matz, Arlington. Yesterday's reunion was 28-year-old Mann's first contact with any of his relatives since babyhood that her maiden name was spelled Layman.

A letter to the Veterans' Administration brought a quick response that a retired Army sergeant by the name of Otis Layman had lived in Gaithersburg, Md., until his death a year ago. The name of a surviving cousin, Cora Jane Webb, was sent to him. He wrote to her on a chance and the fat letter, telling him of his relatives, was her answer.

The letter also told him that for years his grandfather had tried to locate him, but always under the name of Elva Mann. He explained he was christened Elva, but changed it to Alva years ago because youngsters had teased him about his "girl's name."

After the first quick hugs yesterday, Mann was busy trying to identify Dorothy's youngsters: Billy, 14; Evelyn, 13; and Joanne, 21 months, and Andrew's son, William Sherwood, 13.

"Words can't describe how you feel when you've been alone for years and suddenly you find you've got a family," he declared. He is a bachelor.

He will visit here until the fall, when he is scheduled to return to Texas to attend school there. Most of his time, he said, will be spent in tracking down cousins and such, who live in Maryland and Pennsylvania.

100 at Memorial For Sailors Lost On Underhill

Annapolis, Md., July 23 (AP).—Approximately 100 persons gathered here today for the third annual memorial service for the men lost aboard the U.S.S. Underhill. The destroyer was sunk by a Japanese suicide submarine off Formosa July 24, 1945.

Chapel services will be held tomorrow at 3:15 p. m., the hour the Underhill went down, taking 10 officers and 102 men to their deaths.

Harry N. Pierce, a Monsey, N. Y., electrical contractor, is president of the reunion committee. He was an electrician, second class, on the Underhill.

Alexander Morrison of Williamson, N. Y., who lost a son in the sinking, is chairman of arrangements.

Budget Talks Set In Falls Church

A public hearing on the Falls Church city budget for the 1950 fiscal year will be held Monday at 8 p. m. in the Falls Church City Hall.

The $304,938 proposed budget includes city expenditures of $261,736 and a capital outlay of $43,202.

Set aside in the tentative budget is $10,500 for the suit Falls Church will file sometime this week to annex some 14 square miles of adjacent Fairfax County territory.

4 D. C. Men Named On Engineers' Fellows List

Four Washington men have been named on the list of Fellows of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers when the list was made public for the first time, yesterday.

The four are Ely C. Hutchinson, chief of the production and research development division, Department of Commerce; William A. Shoudy, of the Charles H. Tomkins Co.; Maurice E. Weschler, head of the Department of Mechanical Engineering, Catholic University, and Herbert L. Whittemore, 2008 [illegible] nw.

The degree of fellow is conferred [illegible] years of practice or teaching experience in a recognized school. The entire list numbers 263, less than 1 per cent of the society's membership.

Sisters Drowned In Creek North Of Annapolis

Two Baltimore sisters, 14 and 15, drowned yesterday in White Hall Creek, six miles north of Annapolis.

They are Virginia Lea Kavey, 15, and Ruth Elaine Kavey, who were visiting their aunt, Mrs. William Briggs of Annapolis. Anne Arundel County police had recovered only one body after five hours of dragging.

Police said the sisters were playing on a sand bar in the middle of the creek, when they stepped into an abrupt fall-away. They never rose to the surface, police said.

Corpl. Robert E. Jordan

Corpl. Robert E. Jordan, 22, who was killed in the Battle of the Bulge, will be reburied in Arlington Cemetery at 2 p. m. Wednesday.

Corpl. Jordan

He was a member of the 393d Infantry Regiment of the Ninety-ninth Division. A native of Washington, Corpl. Jordan was graduated from Roosevelt High School and worked for the Army Map Service before entering the Army in December, 1942.

He was the husband of Mrs. Helen Jordan of Arlington Village, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer S. Jordan of 210 Upshur st. nw. He is survived also by two brothers, Edward S. Jordan and Leo L. Jordan, both of the Washington area.

Mrs. Grace Snyder

Mrs. Grace Lydia Magee Snyder, 68, wife of John Paul Snyder, pharmaceutical consultant, died yesterday at Suburban Hospital several hours after she suffered a heart attack.

Mrs. Snyder was admitted to the hospital two weeks ago after she scalded herself severely while taking a shower.

Born in Morrisville, Pa., she was educated in the schools of Easton, Pa. She came here with her husband in 1939. He maintained business offices as a pharmaceutical consultant in the Shoreham Building. They lived at 7204 Overhill rd., Bethesda.

Besides her husband she is survived by a son, John Magee Snyder, of Baltimore, and two grandchildren.

A. M. Richardson

New York, July 23 (AP).—A. Madeley Richardson, 81, professor of musical composition at the Julliard School of Music for 27 years, died today. He was noted as an organist anad had many works published.

Leary Rites Scheduled For Monday

Mrs. Josephine Davis Leary, 72, chronicler of Georgetown life and writer of "Post-Impressions," published in the Washington Post in 1940 and 1941, died yesterday in Lisner Home, 5425 Western ave. nw. She had been long suffering from illness.

A native of Washington, she was born July 23, 1877, and was a longtime resident of Georgetown.

She was graduated from Western High School with honors in 1896, winning a Goucher College scholarship. She was graduated from Goucher in 1900, and was her class' valedictorian, and editor of the year book, "Donnybrook Fair."

Married Army Captain

A year after graduation from Goucher College she was married to former Army Captain Neil Phillips Leary, a traveling executive of the Southern Express Co., later merged with the Railway Express Agency. For several years she accompanied Mr. Leary on his duties through Georgia, North and South Carolina, Alabama and Florida. He died in 1941.

She served as student adviser at Goucher College from 1930 through 1934, and returned to Washington in 1940 when Lisner Hall was opened.

In 1940 Mrs. Leary started gathering observation notes on Washington and Georgetown. Her Washington notes took form as the Post-Impressions column.

Book of Memories

In 1947 her intimate studies of Georgetown resulted in "Background Glances at Georgetown," published by Vietz Press of Richmond, Va. The book, according to her own introduction of it, was made up of "memories and hearsays of all the small houses of Georgetown, its schools, shops and the average people who lived there."

Up to three weeks before her death she was busy on a second volume covering the same period as the first—the 1880's and 1890's. This one, however, concerning churches and their bazaars, was unfinished. Her son, Peter Leary, Washington publicist for the lumber industry, who lives at 5741 Colorado ave. nw., intends to complete the work from notes left by her.

Mrs. Leary was a member of the American Association of University Women, a member of the founder group of the Home Interest Club of Georgetown, member of the Washington Goucher Alumna Association, of the Women's Alliance of All Souls Unitarian Church. She was an Alpha Phi.

In addition to her son, Peter, she is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Urquhart Ansley of Chestnut Hill, Pa.

Memorial services will be held Monday at 10 a. m. in All Souls Unitarian Church, 16th and Harvard sts. nw. Interment will be private.

Albert Waldman

Albert Waldman, 61, retired grocer, died of a heart attack last night in his home at 6123 8th st. nw.

Mr. Waldman migrated to Long Branch N. J., from his native Lithuania in 1900. He had been living in Washington since 1908.

A heart condition forced his retirement six months ago from the grocery business he operated with his son Benjamin Waldman at 646 Rock Creek Church rd. nw. Previously, he managed a butter-and-egg company here.

He was a member of Ohev Sholom Congregation and the Maccabees.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Mary Waldman, his son, Benjamin Waldman, 7522 8th st. nw., and a sister, Mrs. Rose Sherman, Springfield, N. J.

Funeral services will be held at 4:30 p. m. today at Danzansky's Funeral Home, 3501 14th st. Burial will be in Ohev Sholom Cemetery.

Col. Harry Cullins

Reburial services for Col. Harry Cullins, of the Army Quartermaster Corps, who died on January 31, 1944, in a fire at the Finchaven, New Guinea, Army base which he commanded, will be held at 3:30 p. m. Monday at Arlington National Cemetery.

A native of Goodland, Kans., Colonel Cullins, who was 48 at the time of his death, entered the Army as an enlisted man at the age of 18. He served at Army posts all over the United States and in the Philippines. He was well known in polo circles, having played with the Second Division team at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., for many years. He was later captain of the Governor's Island (N. Y.) team.

Colonel Cullins is survived by his widow, Mrs. Dorothy V. Cullins, of Asheville, N. C.; his father, John D. Cullins of Goodland, two daughters and five grandchildren.

J. E. Griffith, Ex-Furniture Man, Dies

James Edward Griffith, 82, retired furniture store owner, died yesterday at Washington Sanitarium after an illness of several months brought on by a heart condition.

Born on Aquia Creek near Fredericksburg, Va., he was superintendent of a railroad construction company for several years. He came to Washington in 1909 and operated a furniture store here until his retirement in 1932. He lived at 4830 Illinois ave. nw.

A member of the Central Lodge of the Odd Fellows for 53 years, he had served as chairman of the board, past grand master of the subordinate lodge, and past chief patriarch and captain of the canton. He was a member of the Mount Vernon Methodist Church.

He is survived by his son, Thomas E. Griffith of 622 Elsworth dr., Silver Spring, Md., and six grandchildren.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

D. E. Nicklas Dies; Former Pharmacist

David Edward Nicklas, 73, died yesterday at the home of his son, Dr. Edward Wilson Nicklas, 5112 Lowell lane nw., after a long illness brought on by a heart condition.

Mr. Nicklas

Until his retirement three years ago, he had served for 23 years as the Washington representative for Sharpe & Dohme, manufacturers of drug supplies.

Mr. Nicklas was born in Chambersburg, Pa., and was a graduate of the Chambersburg Academy. He was graduated from the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy 50 years ago and had been a resident of Washington for the past 37 years.

In 1903, he married the former Edna Wilson, of Punxsutawney, Pa. She preceded him in death last March.

Besides his son, with whom he made his home, he is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Emily N. Buffington, of Norfolk, Va., and three grandchildren.

Funeral services and burial will be held Tuesday in Punxsutawney.

Mrs. Violet Earhart Bouton

Mrs. Violet Earhart Bouton, 50, of 2857 Monroe st. ne., wife of James O. Bouton, director of second-class mail, United States Post-office Department, died yesterday in Sibley Hospital after an illness of several months.

Mrs. Bouton was born in Bristol, Tenn., October 29, 1898, and was educated in Public schools there. She lived for a time in Blountville, Tenn., before coming to Washington in 1919.

She was active in Women's Association affairs of Sherwood Presbyterian Church, 22d and Rhode Island ave. nw.

In addition to her husband, she is survived by two sons, James O., jr., and Charles, of the Monroe st. address, and a brother, Pearce Earhart of Bristol, Tenn.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. Monday in Sherwood Presbyterian Church, with burial in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Handicapped Group To Be Given Charter

A charter will be awarded Virginia Lodge No. 1 of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped at 8 p. m. Monday in the home of James D. Roberts, 1034 N. Quincy st., Arlington.

Paul A. Strachan, AFPH head, will present the charter to the group, which numbers 20 handicapped Virginians. Following the ceremony an election of officers will be held.

Laupheimer Rites Monday In Alexandria

Funeral services for Sylvern Laupheimer, 63, veteran member of the Washington Wholesale Drug Exchange, will be held Monday in Demaine funeral home, 520 South Washington st., Alexandria, Va.

Mr. Laupheimer

Burial will be in Home of the Peace Cemetery.

Mr. Laupheimer died Friday in his home at 117 Lee st., Alexandria, after an illness of six months.

Mr. Laupheimer, a graduate of George Washington University School of Pharmacy, had been in business from 1911 to 1923 when he retired.

He opened a drugstore at 1st st. and Florida ave. nw., in 1911 and was a popular fixture of the negihborhood there until 1923. Since then he had made his home in Alexandria.

He was the son of Michael and Henrietta Laupheimer, who settled in Alexandria in 1850.

His lodge and fraternal affiliations included Lafayette Masonic of Washington and Bethel Temple in Alexandria.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Martha S. Laupheimer; three stepsons, Samuel, Sigmund and Norman Bernheimer, of the Lee st. address; three sisters, Mrs. Stella Dreifus, Mrs. Bella Levy, and Mrs. Victoria Salomonsohn, all of 520 N. Washington st., Alexandria, and an only niece, Mrs. Marjorie Warren of Presidential Gardens.

J. A. Balducci Dies; Italian Leader Here

Joseph A. Balducci, 82, for many years prominent in Italian organizations and the Holy Rosary Catholic parish in Washington, died yesterday at Providence Hospital.

Born in Italy, he came to the United States and to Washington, with his wife, in 1895. He has lived here since. He became a chef, working in a number of the old hotels here, including the National, Lawrence and the Riggs House. In summers, with an all-Italian crew, he would take over the kitchens of Greenbrier Inn at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., or Monterey Inn., Blue Ridge Summit, Pa.

Later, he retired from the hotel business and opened a grocery, first at 127 L st. nw., and later at 659 Pennsylvania ave. se. He retired in 1937.

He helped organize the Holy Rosary parish, at 3d and E sts. nw., the Italian Catholic Society and the Holy Name Society, both of that parish.

Mrs. Balducci died here in 1915. Surviving him are a daughter, Mrs. Leroy Eakes, Grandview, Wash.; two sons, Leo L. and Baldo J. Balducci, both of Washington; and a sister, Mrs. Faustina Landi, of Washington.

Funeral services will take place at 9 a. m., Tuesday, at the Holy Rosary Church. Burial will be at St. Mary's Cemetery.

107-Year-Old Ex-Slave Tells About Women

The Washington Post
JOHN WESLEY WASHINGTON
. . . 107 years old

By John London
Post Reporter

In 107 years a man should learn something about women. And John Wesley Washington who turned 107 yesterday says he has learned something about women:

"You can't do without 'em—but Lawdy boy, don't you ever let 'em know it!"

This the incredibly vigorous centenarian advised in a dramatically hushed voice, accented by many guffaws and much hand slapping of his right thigh.

Peering puckishly over the horn rims of his low-perched glasses, John Wesley Washington, who has survived slavery, freedom and two marriages, added:

"Give your woman orders, reasonably; give her affection, often; but give her reason to believe she's got some advantage, never—or she'll play upon you like an organ."

As the venerable gentleman began to explain how "All of 'em look good at my age . . . ," a relative gently sidetracked the conversation in the direction of his slave-day reminiscences.

John readily took the cue. He talked of Marsah Jess Perkins' plantation, 10 miles up from Jackson, Miss.; the brawny overseer, "Yellow Lee," his thonged whip lashed to a wooden handle—and the good white folks like the marsah's daughter, dark-haired Jessie.

"She it was who taught me to read and write, with her fingers on her lips, sayin' 'Momma might not care but daddy wouldn't like it.'"

The first words he learned, he said, were "God made you for his own glory."

Colonel Jess himself was a good man, old John recalled. "The colonel kept us fed and clothed, saw we had good shanties, and he never let the older folks be whipped, not old Colonel Jess."

But one day Union troops took over and passed the word around the slaves were free.

"I walked up and told the marsah I was free. He threatened to arrest me, but I walked away, and he just stood there, not believing."

John hauled cotton hidden in the swamp for a white man— and got paid. He sharecropped cotton, worked for 20 years as foreman for a contractor who built jails and courthouses. The son of a blacksmith, he could use his hands and understood people.

He also served as a policeman and real estate agent, accumulating friends, money and a philosophy: "Live up to your obligations and down to your means."

In 1936 he came up here from Jackson to live with his daughter. She died in 1946 at the age of 71.

More than 100 men have recently volunteered to serve in the advance gifts-business section of the Community Chest campaign.

Some 600 volunteers will be needed to canvass 3000 major business firms, Frank J. Luchs, 36-year-old general campaign chairman, reported yesterday. He urged business and professional leaders and others to volunteer now.

Ruhland's Place

Medical Men To Help Pick Health Chief

A committee representing medical schools, hospitals and medical and dental societies has been requested by Commissioner Guy Mason to nominate three candidates to succeed Dr. George C. Ruhland as District health officer.

Mason said yesterday he has asked for acceptances by August 1. The Commissioners will select the health officer from the nominees, Mason said.

Dr. Ruhland, who was 70 years old in May, will retire September 30. He became health officer in 1935.

Yugoslavia Gives Up Greek Reds' Support

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, July 23 (AP). Foreign Minister Edvard Kardelj said today Yugoslavia has withdrawn "moral and political" support from the Greek rebels because of the Cominform's anti-Yugoslav campaign.

His statement underscored a declaration two weeks ago by Premier Marshal Tito that the Greek-Yugoslav border had been closed to protect the Yugoslav people from the Greek war.

New Refuse Station to Go Into Operation

A new odorless, dust-free refuse transfer station at New Jersey ave. and K st. se., will be put into operation Wednesday.

District officials, including William Xanten, superintendent of the District Division of Sanitation, inspected the new $926,000 station yesterday.

Although the building is not yet completed, it will be used immediately because of urgent need, Xanten said.

The station, which replaces a 50-year-old loading platform, will provide a transfer point for garbage, street sweepings and household ashes from collection trucks to trailers, railway gondola cars and farmers' trucks.

Xanten said the District collects 160 truckloads of refuse daily in the summer and 230 truckloads in the winter.

The exterior of the two-story building is not yet finished, railway tracks are to be laid, and grounds landscaped.

$34,600 Penalties Asked

Oslo, Norway, July 23 (U.P.).—The government has demanded that the business and personal heirs of Henry Johansen, deceased husband of operatic soprano Kirsten Flagstad, pay 17,215,000 kroner (about $34,600) in penalties for his alleged wartime profiteering, it was announced today.

Mason Acts

Draft Unit, Drunk Clinic Share School

The District Selective Service organization has been overruled and will have to share quarters in the old Weightman School, 23rd and M sts. nw., with the District's alcoholic clinic, Commissioner Guy Mason said yesterday.

Selective Service opposed placement of the clinic in the building, which it has used for offices and storage since shortly after the school was abandoned for educational purposes in 1942.

Mason said the clinic will take over two or three rooms on the second floor as soon as arrangements are made with Selective Service. The clinic is expected to be opened about September 1.

Mason said he had informed Selective Service that the Weightman School is District property and that room had to be found for the clinic.

Film on Palestine To Be Shown Tuesday

A motion picture titled "Life in Palestine" will be shown at 8 p. m. Tuesday in the United Baptist Church, 1815 North Quincy st., Arlington.

The Rev. Ralph Freed, a missionary in Palestine for 22 years and now pastor of Arlington's Christian and Missionary Alliance Church, will present the film.

Bloodmobile To Visit Store

The Red Cross Bloodmobile makes its first stop of the week Monday at the Sears Roebuck store at 4500 Wisconsin ave. nw. About 75 to 100 employes are expected to contribute, with the store officials leading off.

On Tuesday, the Bloodmobile will move out to the National Catholic Community Service Club at 115 N. Washington st., Alexandria. Donors may contribute there between the hours of 10 a. m. and 4 p. m.

Other visits of the Bloodmobile for the coming week are scheduled as follows: Wednesday, from 8 a. m. to 3 p. m. at the Post theater, Fort McNair, Va.; and Thursday, from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. at the Naval Dispensary, Dahlgren, Va.

During the past week a total of 509 pints of blood was distributed by the Red Cross Washington Regional Center, including 306 to hospitals in the District; 81 to Maryland; 90 to Virginia, and 32 to West Virginia.

VA to Make GI Insurance Forms Available Aug. 29

By The Associated Press

The Government will start handing out the long-awaited application blanks for its $2,800,000,000 GI life insurance refund August 29.

Veterans Administrator Carl R. Gray, jr., said yesterday the forms will be available on that date in every postoffice, every VA office and at veterans' service organizations.

"Just mail in your application filled out as completely as you possibly can," Gray advised in a statement.

"Then wait until the checks start out sometime in January of next year."

About 16,000,000 present and former policyholders and their dependents will share in the payments through the 20,000,000 policies issued from 1940 through 1947.

D. C. Leads 46 States in Child Dental Care

The District of Columbia provides a higher rate of dental care for children than all but two of the 48 States, and has a better preventive dentistry score than the Nation.

The District's position in dentistry was outlined yesterday by Dr. James J. Greeves, president of the D. C. Dental Society.

Only Massachusetts and New York bettered the District in scoring by the dental section of the American Academy of Pediatrics for volume of dental care for children, Dr. Greeves pointed out. The academy report covered the period of March to September, 1946, but was only recently released.

The District's rating should be even higher now than it was three years ago, Dr. Greeves added, pointing out that local registration of dentists increased from 752 then to 805 now.

The academy report measured the volume of dental care here in terms of children visiting dentists' offices and clinics for treatment. On an average day, it found, 1003 children are treated in the District, a score of 6.8 children for each 1000 child population.

Massachusetts was given a 7.2 rating and New York, 6.9, in the same scoring system.

In private dental offices the ratio of fillings to extractions, base of scoring of preventive dentistry, was 8 to 1 for District children under 6 years of age, and 4½ to 1 for older children. The Nation's average showed that fillings were 2.7 times the number of extractions.

No Big Rush to Beat Sales Tax Here Yet

By V. R. Montanari
Post Reporter

"Stocking up" by thrifty District residents trying to beat impending local sales taxes has caused a mild—and very spotty—buying rush in certain lines of merchandise, some merchants reported last week.

On the other hand, others said they saw no indications of such tax buying last week, suggesting that this week might tell the story. The taxes are effective August 1, a week from Monday.

Cigarettes and liquor, both items which will have special tax increases amounting to more than the 2 per cent sales tax, seem to be most popular for those buying ahead, but even with these products, reports on recent sales varied widely.

Thirsty Look Ahead

In the case of liquor, some retailers said their larger customers were buying ahead as many as 5, 7 or even 10 cases.

Other liquor dealers, particularly those whose customers buy by the bottle rather than by the case, declared that if there's any tax buying rush going on, they haven't seen any. These usually added that business was "as bad as ever."

Those buying now are theoretically saving 60 cents a case on the increased alcohol tax, in addition to the sales tax, which would amount to 70 cents on a $35 case, as an example.

Rise May Be Greater

Actually, dealers say final costs to the consumer after August 1 may increase by more than the amount of the additional taxes—if wholesalers take the opportunity to pass along added license fee costs—or less, if retailers decide they will have to absorb at least part of the increased alcohol levy.

Spokesmen for large wholesalers said present plans are to pass on to retailers only the 25 cents a gallon increase in the alcohol tax, or 60 cents a case. However, one distributor may make his increase 70 cents a case, the extra 10 cents being to cover higher license fees.

Several retailers predicted that the higher prices would generally be limited to the amount of the new taxes—11 cents a fifth on a $3 bottle, for example, or 15 cents on a $5 liquor. They cited as a reason the desire of downtown dealers to keep their prices competitively below those in Virginia.

Smokers Buy Ahead

Chain store and other large vendors of cigarettes seemed to think their customers were more eager to buy ahead of the coming 1-cent-a-pack District levy, which amounts to 5 per cent on a 20-cent pack, more on cigarettes sold for less than 20 cents. "Investments" in cigarettes involve comparatively small amounts of money, they pointed out.

Reporting sales of 10 to 20 cartons to single smokers already, many cigarette vendors believed this week would see even more of such buying by thrifty customers. However, a minority felt their customers wouldn't be bothered.

Some dealers selling large home items such as refrigerators, washers, furniture and television sets on time have noticed some pick-up in sales since the sales tax was enacted.

However, one of these remarked that the greatest increase in his sales was in refrigerators—about 20 per cent—and it coincided with the hot weather, which he said may have been the greatest factor. Some of his customers have mentioned the tax, he said.

Little Indication

Other dealers in these appliances whose customers are more in the habit of paying cash generally said they saw little or no indication of buying in anticipation of the 2 per cent sales taxes.

"A man who can afford to pay $1000 for a television set," said one, "isn't going to hurry and make up his mind on which to buy, just to save $20."

Department store spokesmen belittled the psychological effect of the coming taxes on the public, generally speaking. One said sales of refrigerators and washers were better than last year, but doubted if the sales tax was much of a factor.

"Of course," he added, "we may be whistling in the dark a bit on this, because any sales speeded up by the tax this month are just borrowed from next month—but I really don't think you can attribute much to tax buying."

See No Signs of Rush

Most department store men said flatly they saw no indications of a buying rush. General sales have dropped here this summer, and the slump might have been greater without the tax incentive, said one, but on the other hand special sales may have been the effective factor.

Furriers felt the same way, and one whose sales of fur coats have "definitely perked up" said a current price-reduction sale was probably a large factor. Many residents who are fur coat buyers are on vacation anyway, several pointed out.

Automobile dealers generally reported that the only real effect of tax anticipation they have noticed has been in the case of customers who have had orders in for some time.

The coming auto excise tax has spurred a number of these buyers to request delivery in time to obtain District license tags before the August 1 deadline. Dealers pointed out that a car registered on or after August 1 is subject to the tax even if purchased in July.

Most home builders, though not all, said the sales taxes they would have to pay on construction materials would necessarily be passed on to the buyer. Rufus S. Lusk, real estate statistician, estimates that the tax will add $60 to the construction cost of a house selling for $9500 or $10,000.

The home buyer may be more affected, however, in purchasing home appliances and furnishings for his new house. The total tax on a stove, refrigerator, electric fixtures, furniture and other such items could easily run to more than the estimated $60 on materials taxed, builders pointed out.

8 Witnesses On Home Rule Due Monday

House hearings on District home rule are about to begin another "final week" with no indication just when the end will come.

Eight witnesses are scheduled to appear at a 10 a. m. hearing Monday before the House District Subcommittee headed by Representative Harris (D., Ark.). Harris has indicated he will keep the hearings going until everybody is heard. Nearly 30 others have asked to appear.

Last week was to have brought the long-drawn-out hearings to a close, according to District Committee Chairman McMillan (D., S. C.), but short sessions and long testimony brought little progress.

Witnesses scheduled to appear Monday are:

Maynard B. DeWitt, American Veterans Committee; James W. Bryan, Democratic Central Committee; Harry N. Stull, Federation of Citizens Associations; Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs; the Rev. Orris G. Robinson, Washington Federation of Churches; Louis Brownlow, former District Commissioner; Marvin M. McLean, former head of Brookland Citizens' Association, and Charles E. Sands, Hotel and Restaurant Employes and Bartenders International Union, AFL.

Congressmen Shun Choice Of GOP Chief

By The Associated Press

Congressional leaders yesterday rejected a proposal that they share directly in picking a new Republican national chairman.

The proposal was made by Sinclair Weeks, Massachusetts national committeeman, former Senator and former GOP national treasurer.

He wrote other members of the committee, scheduled to meet here August 4 to receive the resignation of Chairman Hugh D. Scott, jr., suggesting that members of Congress be cut in directly on the choice of a successor.

Weeks proposed that four members of the GOP executive committee, headed by Scott, sit down August 3 with Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.), House Minority Leader Martin of Massachusetts, Senator Brewster (R., Me.) and Representative Leonard W. Hall (R., N. Y.) to choose a man and recommend him to the national committee.

Brewster and Hall head the GOP campaign committees of the two Houses.

Vandenberg told a reporter he doesn't want anything to do with the choice of a chairman. Brewster said he thinks national committee members generally would "resent" such an action. Martin and Hall were out of the city.

Senator Taft of Ohio, chairman of the Senate GOP Policy Committee, said he doesn't believe the proposal would work.

"The members of the national committee would resent any action by us in Congress to dictate their choice of a chairman just as much as we would resent the national committee's attempting to draft policy for us in Congress," the Ohioan said.

Weeks, who has said he isn't a candidate for the place, wrote committee members he thinks "it is not only the right, but the duty of the committee to select its own chairman."

crutches and wheelchairs, advertising space, amusements, rentals of cars, transportation fares and rents on commercial or residential structures.

Other Exemptions

In addition, sales made to governmental units, semipublic institutions, diplomats or on bona fide contracts entered into before May 27, 1949, date of approval of the act, are exempt.

Professional, insurance or personal services involving less than 10 per cent cost for materials are exempt. "Casual and isolated sales," such as one by an apartment dweller selling a few pieces of furniture, are also tax-free.

Cigarettes and autos are also on the sales tax exempt list, but these are covered by separate taxes. Cigarettes are subject to a cent-a-pack local tax beginning August 1, and autos will be taxed two per cent of the sales price at the time a title is issued in the District.

Public Law 76, the District's revenue act for the current fiscal year, also contains other tax-producing measures. Briefly, the act:

1. Amends franchise tax on unincorporated businesses so as to reduce the exemption from $10,000 to $5000, effective January 1, 1949.
2. Amends alcoholic beverage control act so as to increase liquor, wine and beer gallonage taxes and beer gallonage taxes and liquor license fees, effective August 1.
3. Increases the property tax rate, effective July 1, 1949, from $2 to $2.15 per $100 valuation.

Yield Estimated

How much is expected from these new and increased taxes? District budget officials' latest estimates are: Sales, $9,975,000; auto, $1,375,000; cigarettes, $733,000; increase in unincorporated business returns, $800,000; alcoholic beverage gallonage boost, $917,000; beer, $250,000; liquor licenses, $490,000 and real estate, $2,400,000. The total, $16,940,000.

This estimate covers the 11 months running from August 1 to June 30, 1950—the remainder of the current fiscal year.

For what will the money be used?

About five million of the added District income will be used to finance a $330-a-year retroactive pay raise for city employes and another five to continue the pay boost during the fiscal year. The remainder will be put in the genral fund to offset rising operating expenses of city departments.

Next year, however, if the tax flow continues at the estimated rate, the city will have more than five million dollars available for a start on a long list of delayed capital outlay projects, including schools and welfare institutions. This amount will be the fund now being used to pay the retroactive pay raise.

Several rulings on the sales tax favor the consumer. The tax will be computed on the sales price of an item before excise taxes, transportation charges, financing and interest charges are added, if all of these are separately stated.

May Be Deductible

Payments for the sales tax will probably be deductible from local and Federal income taxes, formal rulings are expected shortly.

Another cheerful note for the future is contained in the revenue act on the local individual income tax. The act increases the exemption from $1000 to $4000 effective January 1, 1950. This saving will not be reflected until you start preparing your returns in 1951.

Here are some questions and answers on the sales tax:

Q. Are items purchased on charge account and C. O. D. and delivered subject to the tax?

A. Yes, if you are a resident of the District. If you live in Virginia, it is not. If you live in Maryland, the District dealer will collect a "use" tax and transmit the pennies to the Maryland government. If you live in either Maryland or Virginia and take the items with you, the local sales tax will be levied.

Q. Can I escape the tax by buying in Virginia?

A. Virginia and Maryland merchants doing business in the District—actually delivering goods to local residents—will be required to register here and collect the "use tax," which is levied at the same rate and manner as the sales tax. They are then to send the pennies collected to the District.

Residents who buy out of the city on a "cash and carry" basis are expected to transmit the proper amount to the Sales Tax Administrator.

Q. If I purchase an item to be sent as a gift to Butte, Mont., must I pay a tax on it?

A. No, if the merchant ships the item. If you mail it yourself, the tax will be collected.

Post Series to Answer Queries on Sales Tax

Beginning today, The Washington Post is presenting a series of eight articles describing the sales tax and other new taxes, which go into effect August 1. The articles have been reviewed for technical accuracy by responsible District government officials.

The Washington Post has arranged with Sales Tax Administrator Allan F. Brooke for replies to sales tax questions submitted by readers in writing. Address Sales Tax Editor, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C. Replies will be printed in The Washington Post as rulings are received from the District Building. It will not be possible to acknowledge individual letters.

Downy Mildew Threatens Shore Cantaloupe Crop

By The Associated Press

A University of Maryland plant pathologist warned Eastern Shore farmers yesterday that downy mildew is threatening to destroy their cantaloupes.

Dr. C. E. Cox said the mildew was detected on cucumbers, but that damage will be slight since the crop is about finished.

However, the disease poses a serious threat to the incoming cantaloupe crop. Dr. Cox said it could wipe out crops in 10 days.

The plant pathologist urged Eastern Shore farmers to start spraying or dusting their plants. He advised the farmers to ask their county agents for information on mixing sprays.

Memo to Plymouth Salesmen

Value-wise buying makes a sweet set-up for you—

You sell the car that likes to be compared!

In the new car market today, the accent is on value. This makes a sweet setup for Plymouth salesmen . . . for you have the great new car that was built to compete—feature for feature, dollar for dollar—with any car at any price!

Ask your prospective customers to look at all three of the leading low-priced cars—or even at cars costing hundreds of dollars more. Ask them to compare—wheelbase, compression ratio, braking action, engine life, riding comfort, interior beauty, ease of handling, cost of upkeep—everything!

But just looking at a car isn't enough. The best way to judge a new car is by its performance on the road. Urge your prospects to drive "all three." Ask them to put Plymouth performance up against any car selling at anything like the same price. When you do this—the new Plymouth does all right!

Johnson Hits State Rule in Virginia

Warsaw, Va., July 23 (AP).—Walter Johnson charged today that Virginians "are becoming a ruled people" because State government is being concentrated in Richmond at the expense of the localities.

Almost all public officials in the State are under control from Richmond because they are appointed by the State or because their salaries are set by State bodies, the Republican candidate for Governor said in a radio address here.

Even the General Assembly "cannot do a reasonable job" because it is "so restricted and restrained," Johnson declared.

The short Assembly session of 60 days "does not permit time for full debate on important legislative problems," he said, and "as a result many enactments are unwise and unsound."

A tremendous bureaucracy has been created in State government because of one-party rule, Johnson added, and the only way to eliminate "machine government is to substitute two-party government."

The GOP candidate, now Commonwealth's attorney of Northumberland County, charged that "numbers of our State bureaus now wrongfully make law, execute law and adjudicate law." And, he added, "every single one of these bureau heads is an appointee," who, because he is not elected by the people, "has little regard for the people."

He cited the State Corporation Commission, the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, and the Division of Motor Vehicles as bureaus which make their own laws.

The Division of Motor Vehicles, Johnson said, "is a flagrant law violator. It has its own force of agents which it dresses up like storm troopers with pistols and bullets and handcuffs . . . in turn these agents are sent over the countryside to intimidate people into compliance with unlawful and illegal demands."

Johnson repeated that he did not believe that the State was "out of debt" even though it had a surplus because "Virginia is so far behind our needs in capital structure in school buildings that we must spend 400 million dollars to catch up."

Election of any of the four Democratic candidates for Governor would only mean a perpetuation of one-party rule, Johnson said.

With 102,250 Votes

Arnold Says He'll Capture Nomination

Richmond, Va., July 23 (AP).—Predicting that Virginians will cast 325,000 votes in the August Democratic primary and that he will get 102,250 of them, Remmie L. Arnold, candidate for Governor, tonight forecast his nomination over his three opponents.

Arnold, in a radio address, said that the reason for his confidence "is that I have great confidence in that large majority of voters—those citizens of Virginia who will quietly and with great satisfaction cast their votes against the organization's candidate."

Arnold estimated that there are 65,000 "silent voters" in the Commonwealth and that he will get 42,250 of these ballots. These votes, he said, plus "60,000 known votes in the Arnold column" will give him 102,250 votes, "more than enough to nominate me as the Governor of this great State."

Arnold said his figures were based on "an independent survey" and on "records that I have in my headquarters."

Senator Battle and his supporters drew the burden of Arnold's fire and he asserted that candidates Horace Edwards and Francis P. Miller along with him "are the center of an attack by Senator Battle and the machine" in an attempt to make them "victims of one of the most vicious political tricks that can be pulled out of the smutty ammunition barrel of Virginia's professional political machine in their attempt to build up Candidate Miller as a public enemy of the State to be beaten at all cost."

Fenwick Says Arnold Twisted the Facts

State Senator Charles R. Fenwick said yesterday that Remmie L. Arnold was "twisting the facts" when Arnold charged Fenwick with offering him the lieutenant governorship to stay out of the gubernatorial race.

Fenwick said Arnold was the first to make advances. Arnold originally asked Fenwick to run for lieutenant governor on the Arnold slate, the Arlington legislator disclosed.

'50-Cent Dollars'

School Loan Idea Assailed By Edwards

Tazewell, Va., July 23 (AP).—Horace H. Edwards declared here today that counties would be "unwise and foolish" to raise school funds by borrowing "50-cent dollars during these inflationary times."

Speaking at a rally at the Tazewell County courthouse, the candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor cautioned his listeners that such loans might have to be "paid back with 100-cent dollars."

John S. Battle, one of Edwards' three opponents for the nomination, has proposed, as part of his program, 44 million dollars in loans to localities by June 1, 1950, for school construction.

Of this plan, Edwards said: "It's still a debt and has to be paid." He added that its repayment would mean, for example, an increase of $4.12 in the real estate tax rate in Tazewell County.

Again Urges Sales Tax

Edwards reiterated his stand in favor of a 2 per cent sales tax to raise school funds, saying such a tax for four years would bring $2,390,000 to Tazewell County for school purposes without the necessity for any local tax increases.

Former Ninth District Congressman John W. Flannagan, jr., and Dr. Jack W. Witten of Tazewell, member of the House of Delegates, spoke in support of Edwards at the rally here today.

Flannagan, veteran of 18 years in Congress, called Edwards the candidate who realizes that "the western boundary of Virginia doesn't end at Roanoke, but extends on to Cumberland gap."

Backing Edwards' sales tax stand, Flannagan said only about one-sixth of the people now are "carrying the tax burden for schools." He added that it "is unfair for the landowners to carry the load for a school system that benefits all of the people."

"Like Millstone," He Says

A program of borrowing "to rehabilitate Virginia schools would be like hanging a millstone around the children's necks for years to come," he said, and continued:

"The only way you can come to the rescue of the boys and girls of Virginia is by adopting a sales tax and earmarking every penny of it for public education."

Witten indorsed Edwards in a brief talk and said that Battle—if elected—"will do just exactly what the old organization tells him—and, gentlemen, you don't know the half of it."

Battle Gets Backing of J. C. Peery

By The Associated Press

John S. Battle's candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Governor gained the backing of George C. Peery, former Governor, yesterday.

"I know of no one better qualified to discharge the duties of Governor of Virginia than John S. Battle," Peery said in a statement issued from his law offices at Tazewell.

Peery, Governor from 1934 to 1938, thus became the first ex-Governor, except Senator Harry F. Byrd, publicly to indorse any candidate in the four-cornered race for the nomination.

"We are living in times when we need men in public office who are aggressively concerned for public welfare, and at the same time sound in their political philosophy and economic concepts," Peery's statement said.

"John S. Battle, by reason of his 20 years of public service in the House of Delegates and Senate of Virginia, has a comprehensive knowledge of State affairs.

"Further, as he has served with an outstanding record during the past two sessions of the General Assembly as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, he is thoroughly acquainted with the State's financial situation.

"As an open-minded Christian, he is genuinely concerned for the people of the Commonwealth, educationally, physically and socially.

"I know of no one better qualified to discharge the duties of Governor of Virginia than John S. Battle. He is a man of his own convictions and has courage to act. His platform is safe and soun and can be fulfilled."

Whitehead Reaffirms Anti-Truman Bill Stand

Delegate Robert Whitehead stood by his version of the origin of Virginia's 1948 anti-Truman bill today in the face of angry denials from Senator Harry F. Byrd and Representative Howard W. Smith.

Whitehead charged Thursday night, in a speech in behalf of the Democratic gubernatorial candidacy of Francis Pickens Miller, that the bill was drawn up by Byrd, Smith and other "nonmembers of the General Assembly" before it was presented to the Legislature.

Today, noting that both Byrd and Smith had labeled his charge "wholly untrue," he said he wouldn't retract "one word I said."

Miller Pledges Walker Ouster As Farm Chief

Front Royal, Va., July 23 (AP).—Francis Pickens Miller promised tonight that if he is elected Governor he will oust L. M. Walker, jr., as State Commissioner of Agriculture.

The State Department of Agriculture does not, under Walker, "render the kind of public service which the farmers of Virginia have a right to expect," Miller declared in a radio address here.

And, he added, "it is obvious that the farmers of Virginia want a new commissioner of agriculture."

But, at the same time, Miller assured division heads under Walker's supervision that their jobs were safe.

He declared that these division heads "have been doing a magnificent job under most discouraging conditions."

Miller said his statement was "in answer" to a question asked last night by Thomas F. Clemmer in a radio address from Harrisonburg.

Clemmer, chairman of a farmers' committee for Miller in Augusta County, had asked Miller directly whether he would fire Walker if elected Governor. Clemmer also charged that the State Department of Agriculture, under Walker, had been guilty of "negligence and indifference" toward the welfare of Virginia farmers.

"The negligence and indifference to the interests of the public which Mr. Clemmer described is characteristic of other departments of the State Government as well as of the Department of Agriculture," Mather said.

"This condition is caused by the Byrd machine and by the type of men who run that machine—men who are not animated first, last and always by a spirit of public service, but who are interested primarily in keeping themselves in office.

"On February 10 I made a solemn pledge to the people of Virginia that no one would be nominated to a top executive or cabinet post who was a servant of the Byrd machine. It is obvious that the farmers of Virginia want a new Commissioner of Agriculture."

Anne Shirley to End Marriage to Scott

Hollywood, July 23 (U.P.).—Actress Anne Shirley announced today she will end her 4-year-old marriage to Producer Adrian Scott, one of the "Hollywood 10" cited for contempt of Congress for refusing to say whether they were Communists.

man makes him a decisive factor, if not a true contender.

Only a plurality is needed to win the nomination.

Walter Johnson of Heathville, is the GOP candidate this year in the first Republican primary in history to be held concurrently with the Democratic primary. Recent maneuvers indicate a sizable GOP vote will be cast for Battle in the Democratic primary. Renegade Republican voters may switch back to their own party in November.

As the day of reckoning neared, old-line Democrats stepped up a campaign stratagem saying, the contest is strictly a two-way affair between Miller and Battle, with rarely a word about Edwards and Arnold.

School Teachers a Factor

Edwards covered the southern half of Virginia last week and apparently picked up momentum in a number of "doubtful" areas by using the other end of the psychological tool.

"Enemies of Miller want most to defeat Miller, and enemies of Battle want most to defeat Battle," he argued. "They are coming from the right and left to converse on the middle of the road and elect a man with a program, not a slogan."

He underlined a foregone conclusion that his candidacy is a terrific drain on the Battle vote, not to mention a diversion to some "liberals" who fear Miller has a radical tinge.

Edwards has an immense following among school teachers of both races—and by that token, a grip on much of the Negro vote, in and out of schools. The teachers seem to feel his 2 per cent sales tax program is a sure bet for better schools and salaries.

His campaign is directed by men experienced in political organization. Many repudiated the "Byrd machine" out of loyalty to Edwards personally and to the "straight" Democratic Party in the 1948 presidential campaign.

Edwards believes he will poll more than 100,000 votes, with Battle close, but under 100,000, shaving Miller by several thousand. Arnold would be apt to round out the difference in a 300,000-vote total.

Battle's strength is due in great measure to his close alliance with the "organization" founded by Senator Harry F. Byrd. It is a group skilled in the art of attracting votes and keeping them year after year.

The core of Battle's power at the polls is among farmers, businessmen and white collar workers. Its influence is felt through the support of a majority of members in the General Assembly and at least half the State's local officeholders.

Battle's insistence the fight is between him and Miller—probably true and certainly effective—has dispelled the indecision of many who toyed with the idea "a vote for Edwards is a vote for Miller."

300,000 Seen As Vote Total

A spokesman in the Battle camp last week predicted the total vote will be less than 300,000. He saw Battle as the winner with at least 100,000 votes. Miller would be second with a thousand or so less than 100,000. Edwards was felt to be worth no more than 50,000, and Arnold, about 25,000.

By these estimates, it may be suspected that the Petersburg manufacturer—a "joiner" extraordinary, successful businessman and farmer—is viewed with scorn by his opponents.

The primary, however, is apt to be decided by a few thousand—if not a few hundred—votes. More than one aspirant would prefer to see Arnold direct all his attention to becoming Grand Imperial Potentate of the Mystic Shrine, a title he is slated to get in 1954.

Held a "Tossup"

Because of Arnold's fraternal activities, his interest in the small businessman and the farmer, and his wide circle of friends, all other candidates consider the Fourth Congressional District a "tossup." It embraces Petersburg and 15 counties between the James River and the North Carolina line.

Miller has no political organization comparable to that of Battle or Edwards. But he has demonstrated the knack of appealing to a diversified bloc of "antiorganization" voters by his uneqivocal determination to overhaul the entire State government. His supporters admittedly are responsible for swelling the voting list by prodding unregistered citizens to sign up and pay their poll taxes.

His most solid support is expected to come from women's organizations.

The "labor vote," of imponderable size and cohesion, is seen as another of Miller's strong points. Otherwise, he has made an outright bid to veterans—he is the only one of World War II running—and is most apt to get the lion's share of the Negro vote.

Teachers in public schools are believed to be lining up for Edwards, but many college professors and "intellectuals" find solace in the Miller philosophy of a "free society." Numbers of the so-called Virginia "aristocracy" also are gathering under his banner.

Miller sizes up the outcome this way: For Miller, 110,000; for Battle, 90,000; for Edwards, 65,000, and for Arnold, 35,000 votes.

About the only gubernatorial contest comparable to this was that of 1917, when Westmoreland Davis of Loudoun County toppled the "organization of the late Senator Thomas Martin.

Davis, dubbed a "wet" candidate when prohibition was an issue, polled 39,318 votes in the primary. Attorney General John G. Pollard (who became Governor in 1930) and Lieut. Gov. J. Taylor Ellyson, both branded as "drys," got 22,436 and 27,811 votes, respectively.

The only time the "Byrd organization" has been without its chosen representative in the Governor's office was in 1938, when James H. Price turned the trick.

His tenure precipitated the most bitter legislative fight in years, because the General Assembly was decidedly pro-organization. It scrapped all his major proposals, only to enact most of them four years later under Gov. Colgate Darden, an "organization" stalwart.

Miller, who was one of Price's spokesman as a freshman member of the House, says no such cleavage will exist if he takes over in January.

He says "machine" men are hinting to him: When you become Governor we are Virginians first and Byrd men second. If they refuse to adopt his program, Miller says, he will carry it to the people.

One of Edwards' recent campaign themes has been to welcome "all Democrats—left or right" back into the fold to put an end to "these songs of hate" and "this bitter factional strife."

One thing is certain: There will be no fewer than four factions in the Democratic Party for at least 10 more days.

The August 2 election will decide not only the Democratic nominee for Governor, but for Lieutenant Governor and Attorney General as well.

Democrats have two to pick from for Lieutenant Governor and two for Attorney General.

In the Republican primary, Berkeley Williams, former Richmond postmaster, and E. Thomas McGuire of Petersburg, a law student at William and Mary, are contesting for the nomination for Lieuterant Governor. The Republicans have no primary candidates for the other State-wide office—Attorney General.

The remainder of the Democratic lineup is this:

Lieutenant Governor—The incumbent, L. Preston Collins of Marion, who won the Democratic nomination in 1945 over State Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington after a court contest of the results; Nick R. Prillaman, Mayor of Martinsville, who entered the race for Governor and then dropped out to seek the second spot as a running mate of Miller.

Attorney General—J. Lindsay Almond, jr., the incumbent, former Roanoke judge and member of Congress from the Sixth Congressional District who was elected by the 1948 Legislature on the death of Harvey Apperson, and Moss Plunkett, Roanoke attorney and frequent candidate for State office on an "antiorganization" ticket.

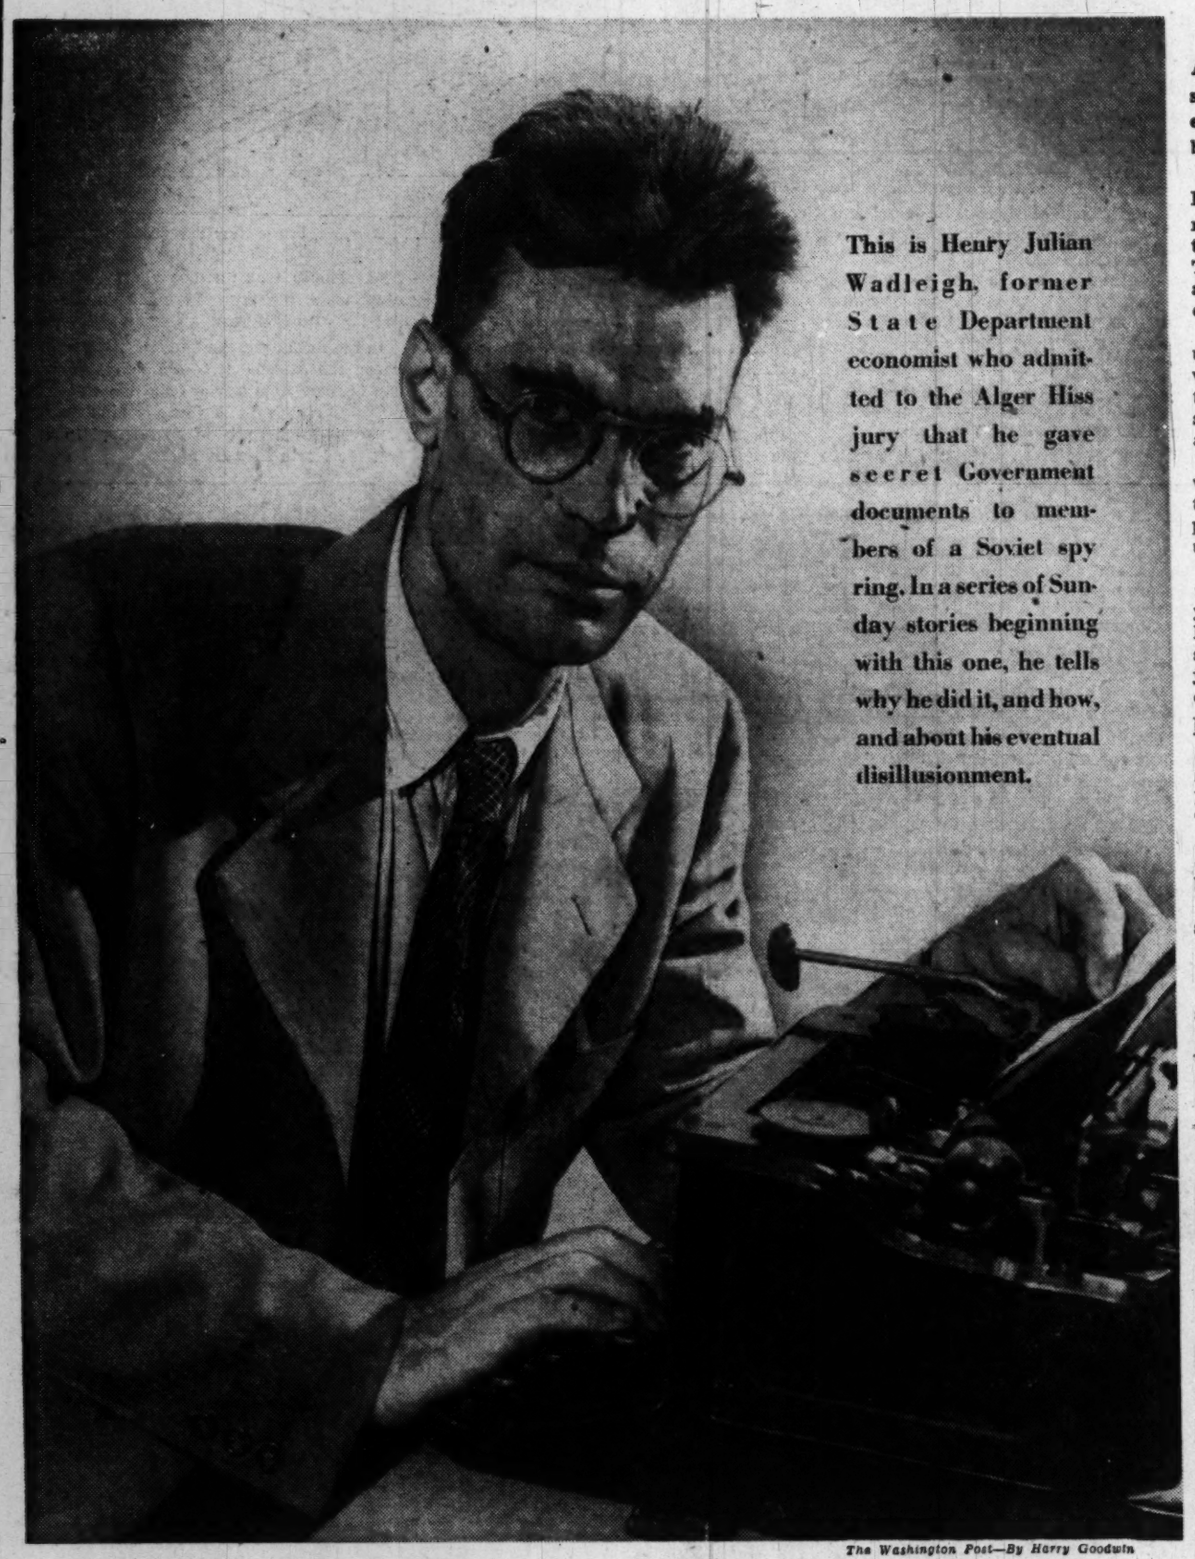
'I SPIED FOR THE COMMUNISTS'

Julian Wadleigh, Former State Department Economist, Tells Why He Gave His Country's Secrets to Russia



This is Henry Julian Wadleigh, former State Department economist who admitted to the Alger Hiss jury that he gave secret Government documents to members of a Soviet spy ring. In a series of Sunday stories beginning with this one, he tells why he did it, and how, and about his eventual disillusionment.

The Washington Post—By Harry Goodwin

By Henry Julian Wadleigh

AS I WRITE these opening lines, I am just beginning to recover from the shock of confessing in public a tragic error which has thrown a shadow over the best years of my life.

A few weeks ago I testified in the Alger Hiss trial that during 1936 and 1937 I regularly passed out classified papers from the State Department to a Soviet spy ring. That evening I had a long conversation with a couple of trusted old friends, a married couple.

"Julian," the woman said, "I just can't understand how a person like yourself, with your family background, could do a thing like that. I simply cannot understand it!" I tried to explain how it came about.

As I talked on for hours, both listened with evident interest. When I had finished, the woman said: "That does seem to explain it, in a way, and yet—I still don't understand it."

Well, here is my story. I shall tell it from the very beginning—back to my youth—by way of shedding some possible light on how it came about that in 1949 I should turn up in an American court of justice and admit that I was guilty of espionage.

Integrity Above All

SOMETIME in the year 1907, a young Episcopalian minister crossed the Atlantic with his wife and 3-year-old son. That man was my father. He was humane and liberal in his views. He valued honesty and integrity above all. That was to be the central theme in my upbringing.

My father believed very strongly that one should direct one's attention to the good and beautiful things in life. It was easy in those years before the First World War to emphasize the good things. The world, it seemed, was getting more humane, more enlightened and more prosperous. There was still much evil—poverty, oppression, tyranny—but it seemed then to be melting away gradually like snow under a warm spring sun. This cheerful view was, of course, shattered by the outbreak of World War I.

My father was then rector of the American church in Florence, Italy, and was planning a British education for me as the best possible intellectual training then available anywhere. When the war ended, I was sent to school at Marlborough. I was 14 years old, and I found myself thrown together with a group of boys who despised me as a highbrow and a foreigner. This experience developed a rebellious attitude in me. I reacted against the Tory atmosphere there.

At Marlborough I was much influenced by H. G. Wells' "Outline of History." His ideal of world government, of a loyalty to mankind that should supplant national loyalties, inspired me. I despised "the tribal gods of the nineteenth century," as Wells called the symbols of the national loyalties.

A Filthy Fabrication

WHEN I was 16 or 17, I was exposed to an extremely effective piece of Communist propaganda in one of the London papers. A series of articles on "Nationalization of Women" in Russia told how the Soviet government was supposed to be drafting women into institutions that combined the functions of a bawdy house with those of a nursery for babies and small children. Men would visit there to take their pleasures, the women would receive bonuses for producing babies, the children would be taken away from their mothers ann cared for by professional nurses.

I soon learned that the articles were fake, and after that not only was anti-Communist associated in my mind with lying, but I was inspired with loathing for the insane hatred that could drive people to cook up such filthy fabrications.

I do not wish to suggest that my later collaboration with the Communists can be tracked back to this one incident. This was only an extreme example of a type of journalism that flourished at that time, and such journalism was only one of the many things that pushed me and many of my contemporaries to the left.

Going from Marlborough to Oxford, at the age of 18, was like coming out of a dark cavern into bright sunshine. I am sure that nowhere in the world has there ever been more freedom of thought, more variety of opinions and more give-and-take in ideological discussion than at Oxford. Here you could meet liberals of all shades, Tories, Communists, Socialists, Pacifists, and so forth.

Some of these students had come back to finish their education after surviving the ghastly experiences of trench warfare, and were fired with an enthusiasm to remake the world after a new pattern. Under their influence, an enormous number of little clubs or societies were formed to discuss politics, religion, philosophy and everything else.

Communism is a shade-growing plant. It will not flourish in full sunlight. In these student discussions, Communists would be heard with as much respect as the advocates of any other ideology. But the constant practice of free discussion made most students more moderate and less rigid and extreme in their views.

The first idea that aroused my interest and enthusiasm was Socialism. My best friend, son of very poor parents and at Oxford on scholarships, had come very close to the Communist point of iew. Oxford toned him down to a very mild Socialist, and through him I became familiar with the ideas of the Fabian Socialists, and with those of the Marxists. I rapidly became converted to the Fabian point of view. I admired the Communists for their courage and resolution, their unswerving devotion to their cause, but I could not be intellectually convinced of their beliefs.

According to their line, it was useless to hope that socialism could be achieved by democratic constitutional methods, as the Fabians proposed. All this democracy, all these civil liberties, they held, were just a sham. The governments of the Western countries were dominated by big business, which was allowing the Fabians to prattle away because they were just a clique of powerless intellectuals. But wait, they said, till you have elected a Socialist government; then big business will use its power and influence to set up a reactionary dictatorship overnight.

That, they said, has already happened in Italy, and it will happen in England, in the United States, in Germany, in every one of the so-called democratic countries.

They were right about Italy—dead right. As soon as the Italian Socialists put through some real reforms, big business and the big landowners financed Mussolini and his gang of war-crazed hoodlums and enabled them to seize power. But the Italian experience was due to some rather special circumstances, or so it seemed. I was not at all convinced that it would happen elsewhere. The institutions of Western democracy, I thought, could and should be preserved and perfected.

Peace Through Pacifism

SHORTLY after this I came into contact with a view that is in a sense the opposite of communism—pacifism. This appealed to me much more. I made friends with the Quakers and went to their meeting every Sunday morning.

Pacifism for me and for many of my friends was not just a rule of personal conduct, but a method of world reform. I became convinced that the world's problems could be solved by organized nonviolent resistance against evil. My friends from India told me about the tactics used by Gandhi's followers in their country. Hundreds of people would lie down on a railroad track to stop a train. "It works," they told me.

In 1923 the French army marched into the Ruhr Basin with its rich coal mines and steel mills, collecting unpaid reparations. The Germans stopped work, and after some months of expensive frustration the French army retired, defeated without the firing of a shot. We must preach nonviolent resistance, I thought. People must be persuaded to redress their grievances without fighting and killing, and they will find these new methods more effective than they ever dreamed.

Later, thinking over the problem of pacifism and discussing it with friends, I concluded that nonviolent resistance could be effective only where the oppressors were subject to some civilized inhibitions. When faced with an utterly brutal aggressor, people must fight.

And, so, on this question of the violence and fraud that is the method of war and revolution, I came to adopt a point of view essentially the same as that of most civilized people: We should avoid using this method wherever possible as long as possible, but there are occasions when ruthless action must be met with ruthless action. I regretted this retreat from pacifism, and sometimes argued the pacifist position with friends or acquaintances simply because I found it emotionally satisfying. But I could no longer be convinced that it was realistic.

That was the end result of my search for an ideology. I was a Fabian Socialist, a believer in the welfare state and in civil liberties. I had rejected the extreme of communism and abandoned the extreme of pacifism. I admired much of what the Communists had done in Russia, and believed they would fulfill their intentions of making their system less and less dictatorial with the passage of time; but I felt that their ruthless methods had no place in the countries where civil liberties already existed.

Return to America

AFTER leaving Oxford I studied at the London School of Economics, and for six months at the University of Kiel in Germany.

I recrossed the Atlantic in June, 1929, at the age of 25. I got married at that time and undertook a year's study at the University of Chicago, preparing for a doctor's degree in economics, on a fellowship. Then, the next summer, I was offered a job with the Federal Farm Board in Washington. The university was short of money for fellowships, so I decided to work in Washington and finish my work for the doctorate in my spare time. In 1932 Congress cut the Farm Board appropriation, and I found myself without a job at the very bottom of the depression.

Luckily, I was at work again in October in the Agriculture Department, as a specialist in international economics.

By this time the depression had spread rapidly all over the world. Distress was particularly acute in Germany. Then things began to happen in politics. What happened in Germany seemed very much like what Communist acquaintances had predicted.

German big business, dreading a trend to the left and anxious to smash labor unions, financed Hitler's march to power. The big landowners, always the backbone of German militarism, also helped.

I had seen something of fascism in Italy. I had seen bands of men go out electioneering with clubs. In Germany, in 1929, I had met a few Nazis and some conservatives who were clearly ripe for Nazism. But far more influential at that time were the Social Democrats, the German equivalent of the British Labor Party. They were trying to make a living democracy. I had great hopes for them. Now these hopes were disappointed.

Germany was one of the leading countries in the world, second only to the United States in industrial capacity, with a highly educated population. Its democratic system of government had lasted half a generation and worked successfully. Now it was wiped out overnight. Would it happen only in Germany? Most people in other democratic countries seemed unconcerned, particularly in this country, and their governments were apathetic. I felt stunned and depressed.

Tory Self-Interest

SOON AFTER the Nazi coup in Germany, Mussolini started his war of aggression in Abyssinia. The peace-enforcing machinery of the League of Nations was brought to bear on Italy to stop the Abyssinian adventure. But the British government was determined to sabotage the League of Nations. The motive seemed clear enough.

If Mussolini were stopped, his rule in Italy would probably be overthrown, and quite likely there would be a popular-front government like the one in France, in which the Communists had a little influence. The British Tories preferred to keep Mussolini in the saddle.

British policy had followed much the same pattern a few years earlier when the Japanese seized Manchuria with British encouragement. If the Japanese had been stopped, an effective and really independent government might have been established in China, and British business might have lost some of its special privileges in that country.

Our Government also was apathetic. It did nothing effective in connection with Manchuria or Abyssinia.

Then came the Spanish civil war. Spain, a republic with a government run mainly by liberals and moderate socialists, had democratic aspirations in the genuine Western sense of the word. When Franco started his revolt with the help of Mussolini and continued it with help also from Hitler, the British government announced its nonintervention policy, forced the French to take the same line, and saw to it that the League of Nations took no action. Our Government followed the lead of the British.

But the Russians helped. Not surprisingly, the Communists in Spain steadily gained influence at the expense of the moderate groups that looked mainly to the West for support. Then the apologists of nonintervention justified that policy on the ground that the Spanish government was Communistic.

Party Line Broadens

DURING these years the Soviet government was continually urging that the League of Nations machinery be used effectively to check aggression. This was in line with the interests of Russia, faced with a two-front menace from Germany and Japan. All over the world, Communist parties were vigorously pressing for resistance against fascism and aggression.

About the time of Hitler's rise to power, there had been a very important change in the party line. Previously, they had attacked all other political parties with equal venom. Social Democrats and other Socialists they had labeled Social Fascists. Now they were offering a helping hand to every faction that would join in the struggle against the Nazis and similar groups of the extreme right. It seemed that the Communist movement was becoming less narrow-minded, less fundamentalist.

While these things were going on in the world, I was working in the Agriculture Department and teaching an evening class in economic theory in the department's graduate school. I spent much of my time absorbed in fascinating theoretical problems that had nothing to do with German rearmament or the policy of nonintervention in Spain. I felt more and more as if I were poring over blueprints in an upper room of a building already cracked by the first shock of an earthquake.

Something drastic had to be done, and I felt there was a need for me to help. But what should I do? I had no idea. I was as diffident in making practical decisions as I was confident in handling theories. But of one thing I was convinced.

Civilization was menaced by a highly organized and disciplined enemy. The defense must be disciplined and well coordinated. As far as I could see, the only disciplined group of people in the world offering any vigorous resistance to the growth of fascism was the Communist movement.

After much hesitation, I suddenly decided to offer my services to the Communists, and to do faithfully whatever task they might assign to me.

This decision was a practical one, not based on theoretical convictions. To be sure, I thought, I can pick all kinds of holes in their theories and dogmas, but that isn't the point. This is a world emergency. Narrow-minded dogmatism is a common weakness of people who passionately con-

Loss of Integrity His Biggest Regret

By John London
Post Reporter

HENRY JULIAN WADLEIGH — a dexterously logical man obsessed with an urge to "do something useful for the world"—has conditional regrets about having spied for Russia.

This boney-faced, bespectacled economist ran a hand through his porcupine-stiff hair as he explained:

"One big regret is that I sacrificed personal integrity."

However, the former State Department economist who funneled secret documents to Whittaker Chambers and other Red couriers from 1936 to 1938, added emphatically:

"But it was not a crime of the usual type, as in the case of a fellow who robs a bank for money.

"In times of war one is ready to commit acts of violence or fraud. He may feel revulsion but it has to be done for the country or cause he believes in.

"Of course, fraud and violence are not common in peacetime. Then the great powers resort to spying . . ."

Rationalized Purges

"MY MOTIVES were not selfish but humanitarian," he says in his incisive diction, tinged with a British accent acquired in his Oxford days.

"I still think my aim was right—to stop fascism by cooperating with anti-Fascist groups. But I found it difficult to maintain intellectual independence while working for a cause like communism."

For example, he found himself rationalizing in his own mind the bloody purges in Russia as a necessity for survival.

"All in all, I found spying a disgusting business. As an outspoken person I was just temperamentally unsuited to deception."

But would he repeat the furtive pattern of espionage if he could live those years over again?

"No," he said, rolling a broken rubber band between his left thumb and forefinger—a habit of his equivalent to other people's doodling or gum chewing.

"If I could do it over again I'd quit working for the Government and dedicate myself not to spying but to writing to awaken the American people to the dangers of fascism, of the Hitlers and Japanese militarists."

Hysteria Worries Him

TODAY the world is still in need of messages, and this son of an Episcopal minister has many to deliver himself of.

"I guess you can call me a member of the non-Communist left," he wryly observed, noting that he first became disillusioned with Communism at the time of the Russo-German pact. And he lost complete faith in the "intelligence of Communist leaders" when they tried to establish orthodoxy for scientists.

He's worried about the "witch-hunt hysteria" in America today. He thinks Americans must stop thinking in terms of "hysterical catchwords and try to see the world in perspective."

"Everybody is considered a villian or a hero, when actually practically no one is all one or the other.

"To what extent this country or Russia is responsible for the world situation today is something it will take historians decades to unravel; both have acted unwisely too often."

He wants to make writing his carrier. He's planning outlines for some 11 magazine articles on political and economic problems and is waiting for his agent to locate a publisher for his autobiography, which would be an expansion of his current newspaper articles.

An Economist's Novel

MOST of all he wants to "polish up" the novel he quit work to write in 1947-48. He won't discuss it except to say "it has the background of a world problem and the reader will doubtless be able to figure out the writer was a Government economist."

He's very proud of the effort he put into the confession series of articles he wrote about his espionage.

"I holed up in a hotel in New York for two weeks, sometimes working straight through the night with the aid of benzedrine," he says with a gleam of satisfaction.

He needed the money and he also needed the opportunity to supplement his court confession at the Hiss trial with a public explanation.

The trial confession and these articles, he makes it clear, gave him an opportunity to make a clean breast of it. This he sincerely expects will clear the way for resumption of old friendships and a normal pattern of living.

"I haven't tried to contact any of my friends since this thing started," he said. "For one thing, in this hysterical attitude abroad in the country I was afraid association with me might taint them.

"I'll just wait until the dust has settled before I contact them."

He said he hasn't run into any friends on the street because he's spent most of his time out at his home, the log cabin he's been building in Vienna, Va., since 1940.

"When Chambers first started making his accusations, without naming names, I did run into some people I knew who seemed to deliberately ignore me. But otherwise the neighbors have not been unpleasant and I just haven't run into anyone when I've been in town."

"I was psychologically paralyzed for about six months after testifying before the grand jury in New York, waiting for the Hiss trial. I just kept brooding, couldn't concentrate," he said.

"I'd lost my job, we were living on dwindling savings, had to economize on everything. Naturally it was a severe strain on my wife, too."

He found a rational solution.

Keeper of Bees

"I PLAYED with the idea of becoming an apiarist. I got seven hives from a farmer. They were in poor shape, and I fixed them up. I became so interested I thought for a while of making that my occupation to get away from everything I'd ever done.

"But I realized that was just mental shock and the natural reaction."

He also cleared "quite a bit of an area overgrown with grass and weeds and planted corn, tomatoes, peas and beets."

"I got some wonderful Chinese cabbage."

His bees and gardening and working around the house kept him busy till the Hiss trial—when he expiated publicly for his grievous sin.

The albatross was lifted from his neck. And then his attitude became: "After all, one has to live through things or not live at all . . . Now I've got to tend to the business of making a living, writing."

His second wife, Edith, bore up under the strain better than might be expected. He

A Mixture of Harding and Roosevelt

A Week in History

By Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Mr. Schlesinger is associate professor of history at Harvard and author of "The Age of Jackson," which won the Pulitzer Prize for history.

THE suspension of two major generals for improper conduct in connection with the award of military contracts finally called public attention to the great behind-the-scenes scandal of postwar Washington. It has long been known that the fixers were back in force, dispensing free whisky and cigars to Congressmen and Government officials out of motives other than an innocent love of parties. It has long been suspected, too, that they have found some of their guests grateful and cooperative.

Certainly the pattern of the past would suggest that the Second World War, like the First World War and the Civil War, might well be followed by a moral let-down with consequent laxity in government. But no one had done very much to take the lid off the "5 per centers" until the New York Herald Tribune published a detailed story of the activities of one James V. Hunt, once an Army officer, later a fixer engaged in using his Army connections to help get contracts for clients from the business world. Defense Secretary Johnson subsequently ordered the investigation which resulted in the suspension of the Army's Quartermaster General and of the Chief of the Chemical Corps.

THERE was no indication that these scandals were of the same magnitude as those which have consigned the administrations of Grant and of Harding to the lowest ranks in American history: nor that they reached so deep into the personal circle of the President. Yet, if no Cabinet officers were implicated, as there had been in the days of Harding and of Grant, still Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan, the President's military aide, was named by Hunt as "my closest and dearest friend." Vaughan was also reportedly involved in the evidence collected against General Waitt of the Chemical Corps.

The blow-up over the 5 per centers cast lurid lights on the great internal paradox of the Truman Administration—which is, in a real sense, the projection of the paradox in Truman himself. For while one set of administration officials shabbily connived with fixers in Washington hotel rooms, another set worked on the most ambitious and comprehensive social programs in American history. How to reconcile the 5 per centers and the Fair Deal? What were Charles Brannan, Leon Keyserling and Clark Clifford doing in the same Administration with the Vaughans, Waitts and Feldmans? Who was the prototype of Harry Truman, Franklin D. Roosevelt or Warren G. Harding?

One answer might be that Truman reacted more like Roosevelt to policies and more like Harding to people. Clearly he believed deeply in his Fair Deal; yet he somehow preferred the boisterous, smoking-car humors of a Vaughan to the importunities of the Fair Dealers. Indeed, as Joseph Alsop pointed out, the weakness for the Vaughans was one large factor in Truman's failure to achieve his social objectives.

People now wondered whether the man who had easily dispensed with Chester Bowles and Wilson Wyatt would feel that he had to stand by Harry Vaughan. It was, after all, a mistaken loyalty to unworthy friends which was the ruin both of Grant and of Harding.

A Cloud of Smoke

THE contrast between the Roosevelt and the Harding aspects of the Truman Administration was further emphasized last week when Americans for Democratic Action, the non-Communist liberal organization, held a conference in Washington to mobilize backing for the President's economic policy. The ADA conference, along with the introduction in the Senate of the Murray bill for increased Federal spending, ushered in a new phase of the ideological cold war over the President's economic program. Harry Byrd had already detected in the President's report "more the ideas of Lord Keynes than of American free enterprise," and Senator Taft warned that deficit spending would lead to a "totalitarian state, directing the lives and activities of its citizens." Yet could it be that there was more smoke than fire in the debate over spending and the welfare state?

While certainly never a lavish spender, Senator Taft in other moods has told his party that they must accept the necessity for social legislation. And newspaper financial pages were running such headlines as, "Industry Awaiting Pump-Priming." Given a choice between mass unemployment and spending, nearly everybody would favor spending. The question was whether the time had come to make the choice.

While Washington defined the Truman Administration as the shortest distance between Harry Vaughan and John Maynard Keynes, the Administration faced a tricky problem over whether further atomic bomb information should go to Britain. In a series of secret meetings, General Eisenhower and David Lilienthal were presumed to have supported the President's inclination to trust the British, while the undaunted Senator Hickenlooper took another view. The decision under the terms of the Atomic Energy Act lay with Congress.

In the meantime, the familiar alliance between the extreme left—the Daily Worker and Senator Glen Taylor—and the extreme right—the Chicago Tribune and Senator Wherry—failed badly in its attempt to defeat the North Atlantic Pact.

Labor Anti-Reds Uniting in Italy

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

ROME.—Those famous elections of April 18, 1948, gave Italy a Christian Democrat and therefore anti-Communist government. The new republic, it was generally believed, was on its way to a bright, democratic future.

FRANK GERVASI

But it soon became clear that while the victory of the ascetic Premier Alcide De Gasperi turned the gnomish Palmiro Togliatti out of the government and reduced his nuisance value in the Chamber of Deputies, it did not break the Communists' hold on Italian labor, without whose wholehearted support none of the Christian Democrats' political and economic policies could be realized.

The task of fighting for democratic aims at the labor level, where the risks to life and limb are greatest, fell to a largely unknown little man of 47 named Giulio Pastore. More than a year ago Pastore, former textile worker and newspaperman, wartime partisan and presently a Christian Democrat member of the chamber, set himself the job of creating and enlarging a free, nonpolitical Italian trade union movement.

He has already succeeded in breaking a Communist monopoly on Italian labor by founding the Libera Confederazione Italiana dei Lavoratori, a Free Confederation of Italian Workers. His action inspired the creation of another group, also democratically inclined, the Federazione Italiana del Lavoro.

The powerful, Communist-dominated Confederazione dei Lavoratori, or CGIL, at last has some competition from the LCGIL and the FIL. But can Pastore hold together his estimated 1,500,000 LCGIL followers? Can he induce the leaders of the FIL and their small (at most 250,000) following to join his organization?

More pertinently, can the stocky, balding, patient Pastore build an organization big enough to compete with the mammoth CGIL, which is 4,500,000 strong?

A Radical Departure

THERE are no simple answers to those questions. Nothing is simple in Italy, least of all the relationships between politics and labor. These, since foundation of the trade union movement in 1880, have been inseparable, and Pastore's effort to separate them is as revolutionary a concept as introduction of birth control might be in this country.

Certainly the questions must have affirmative answers if Italian democracy is to survive and Italy is to remain in the western half of this divided world. Italy may delay but not escape political disaster if labor remains under Communist domination and looks toward Moscow, while its government collaborates with Washington.

The bulk of organized labor remains under domination of burly, 55-year-old Giuseppe Di Vittorio, whom the center and right wing press, with more imagination than it usually shows, aptly calls "La Mina," a bomb. He is precisely that. Today he orders a strike—as happened recently in the industrial north—to sabotage the Marshall Plan, tomorrow another to protest the Atlantic Pact.

One day, should circumstances demand, he might generate at the Kremlin's bidding strikes and violence enough to blow the De Gasperi government sky high. That Di Vittorio and his CGIL failed to unseat De Gasperi with a general strike a year ago last week was at least partly due to the courage and initiative of Pastore. This is what happened:

Overplayed His Hand

A WOULD-BE assassin emptied a revolver at Togliatti, godhead of Italian Communism, in an outer hall of the chamber. In protest, Di Vittorio ordered the CGIL, then composed of workers of every hue of the gaudy Italian political spectrum from Red to Black, out on a 24-hour general strike.

Within a few hours not a worker's hand moved, not a wheel turned in all Italy. Trains and buses stopped. Factories were deserted. Restaurants closed down. Italy's life was stilled.

That was in July, 1948, three months after the De Gasperi government had taken office. Di Vittorio, without consulting the non-Communist elements of the CGIL—among them the Christian Democrats, whom Pastore then represented as secretary general—ordered the strike continued "until such time as De Gasperi is overthrown and a new government is formed to include Communists."

Promptly, Pastore notified Di Vittorio that unless he revoked the new order the Christian Democrats would walk out of the CGIL. Di Vittorio ignored Pastore's threat. Pastore did walk out and took with him all the unions he represented. The general strike was broken. Pastore's action probably saved the government, although Sicilian Mario Scelba's well-armed police, now adept at breaking up mass meetings—sometimes with more violence than his critics believe necessary—helped.

Before walking out of the CGIL, Pastore solicited the support of two other anti-Communist labor leaders: Sarragat Socialist Giovanni Canini and Republican Enrico Parri. Both demured, wishing, they said, to "preserve working class unity." Later both learned that "working class unity" might also mean "slavery," quit the CGIL and together formed the FIL.

A Suspected Cassock

CHIEFLY because Pastore was suspected of possible Vatican connections due to his membership in the Christian Democratic party, the LCGIL made little headway at first. Lack of funds and of trained organizers were further handicaps.

But Pastore personally did a lot of hard work. At innumerable meetings he urged workers to join his crusade to give Italy its first free, non-political trade union movement in history.

To critics, who accused him of wearing a cassock under his gray, double-breasted suit, Pastore replied simply that if he had wanted to start a strictly Catholic labor organization, he could and would have done so long ago.

Of Italy's estimated labor force of 18 million, however, only about a third is organized. While the proportion is higher than in the United States, it is smaller than in France and other European countries. Pastore, presumably, has a large field in which to plow and his potential crop of dues-paying members is estimated at three or four million.

In the eight months since he opened headquarters in Rome last November, Pastore has acquired more adherents than the CIO did in the year after it broke away from the AFL in the mid-thirties.

At about the time that Pastore opened his LCGIL headquarters, the Sarragatian Socialist, Canini, and the Republican, Parri, realized their helplessness in the CGIL. They could not buck the big Communist majority in elections, strike votes and other union business.

In November they pulled out of the CGIL. But they refused to align themselves with Pastore, telling friends that they "didn't want to exchange domination by the Communists for the overlordship of the priests."

THERE were indications last week, however, that Canini and Parri might join Pastore in the not too distant future. The three men have begun to know and understand one another, largely as the result of a trip to the United States which Pastore, Canini and Claudio Rocchi, representing Parri, made three months ago.

In America—watching elections at the Ford plant in Detroit, talking with Walter Reuther and other CIO and AFL officials and with hundreds of American workmen—the Italians discovered that much of what Moscow had been telling them through the stooge press about slave-labor conditions, the collapse of capitalism, workers' opposition to the Marshall Plan and a lot of other things, was bunk.

The Italians visited Italian ECA Mission Chief James Zellerbach's plants in Vancouver and saw for themselves that on one point, certainly, Moscow's "information" had been completely wrong. They had been told that Zellerbach's factories were notorious for slave-labor conditions. They found that Zellerbach's plants have enjoyed 14 years without a work stoppage, thanks principally to fair labor practices and model working conditions.

Pastore and his colleagues returned to Italy convinced that a labor organization, dedicated to the best interests of workers and not to the achievement of the aims and ambitions of parties or politicians, domestic or foreign, was not a Utopian dream but an attainable reality.

Since their return, Pastore and the leaders of the FIL have lunched, dined and talked together many times. They have begun to trust each other and to see that it is possible to work together toward common ends.

Communists Deliver

AMERICAN labor experts whose job it is to obtain maximum cooperation from Italian workers for the furtherance of the Marshall Plan and to aid in the formation and growth of democratic trade unionism here, however, harbor no illusions about the magnitude of the job Pastore and, to a lesser degree, his colleagues, have undertaken.

Italy is a long way from having a non-political labor organization, free of Communist domination. As long as Italian workers are underpaid, underhoused and able to obtain only the barest minimum of old-age pensions, sickness benefits and other social advantages, they will follow those leaders who promise most and, in the pinches, get them the most out of their employers or the government. This the Communists, with their big and efficient organization, do on both counts.

Finally, until some genius solves the most pressing of all Italian problems—overpopulation—even such practical things as trade unions become academic. Every year 200,000 to 250,000 more Italians are thrown on the job market. Neither Italian industry nor agriculture can absorb them. And no amount of ECA assistance is going to solve the problem raised by the bald fact that there are more and more Italians annually for the same number of jobs.

U. N. Interpreters Overlook Burps

By Francis W. Carpenter
Associated Press Staff Writer

LAKE SUCCESS.—Soviet Delegate Andrei Y. Vishinsky was in rare form, ripping out Russian at top speed in a speech to a tense political committee of the United Nations. Suddenly the U. N. interpreter faltered, stopped and broke down. He could not go on.

There was immediate consternation. Dmitri Z. Manuilsky, Soviet Ukrainian Foreign Minister, begged his old comrade Vishinsky to slow up a bit. The U. N. staff frantically waved to a woman in the audience to go into the interpreter's booth. She had just arrived to take a job on the staff.

Vishinsky started again, picking up speed as he went along. The interpreter followed him accurately and speedily. He drank a glass of water. She did, too. He banged the table. So did she. He clenched his fists and waved his arms. She did likewise. Soon delegates and onlookers were watching her performance rather than listening to Vishinsky.

When Vishinsky finished, several crowded around his interpreter and congratulated her.

That unhappy day—in the 1947 General Assembly—was the only time the specially picked U. N. interpreting staff ever has broken down. The woman, nameless by U. N. rules, still is on the staff, but the job of translating the hot-tempered Soviet delegate, now Foreign Minister, has been won by George Sherry, Romanian-born graduate of City College, New York. He is what people call a born linguist.

Sherry's high point with Vishinsky so far was when he translated the Soviet delegate's attack on the so-called warmongers in the 1947 General Assembly.

Vishinsky was loud, as usual, but Sherry's voice sometimes rose to almost hysterical heights. People forgot they were listening to an interpretation and thought they were hearing Vishinsky himself. The attack provoked one Congressman, Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), to boos in the press gallery, and it stands out as one of the most violent speeches in any U. N. meeting.

Boss Draws $11,000

THE staff of 60-odd U. N. interpreters makes it a rule to expect the unexpected. They never know what will come up next.

Salaries range from $5450 to $10,900 in annual take-home pay. The director, soft-spoken Georges Rabinovitch, native of Switzerland, gets $11,000 net. In addition, they get a living allowance and a rent adjustment. They figure they could do better as free-lance interpreters, Rabinovitch says, what with so many international conferences going on, but they stay on because they believe in the U. N. and love their work.

The interpreters have their troubles as well as their fun. They have to bone up before every meeting to be sure they know what the delegates will talk about. Even then, they sometimes get rattled. Here is an example, but again the U. N. prefers that the interpreter go nameless. Rabinovitch explains that they are temperamental, like actors, and he'd rather not have any singled out as stars.

In the early days of the Commission for the Reduction and Regulation of Conventional Armaments, an interpreter got mixed up and said: "The Commission for Reduction and Regulation of Arguments."

Andrei A. Gromyko, Soviet delegate, who was speaking, unbent and laughed at that one. He and several other delegates agreed the interpreter might have had the right idea. At the end of the meeting, Gromyko got the floor on a point of order and congratulated the rattled interpreter on his over-all job.

That was the only time an interpreter here won a compliment from Gromyko, who usually is a stickler for the exact shading of meaning on each word. It also got the man a raise.

Then there was a time V. M. Molotov burped during a major speech. Molotov, former Soviet Foreign Minister, came to the U. N. Assembly here in 1946. He spoke in a slow, even style, sometimes waving his cigarette, but his delivery was almost colorless. Late one night, at a meeting on disarmament, Molotov suddenly burped.

Gromyko, following his boss' speech looked startled. U. N. attaches who understood Russian looked disconcerted—but others thought Molotov's burp was pure Russian. Molotov's personal interpreter, Vladimir Pavlow, who is at the Russian Embassy in London, did not translate the burp in this case.

Wisecracks a Specialty

THE U. N. frowns on gestures and stage acting in interpreting, which used to be one of the tricks of the trade. The woman who tackled Vishinsky did not agree with that ruling, but has had to cut down on her gestures. Even so, interpreters can be seen waving their arms and getting excited when the going gets hot.

Rabinovitch says the requirements are strict and the pace is hard. It isn't an eight-hour day, 40-hour a week job. Interpreters must have:

1. Good knowledge of languages, naturally. They must be able to translate proverbs and witty remarks on split-second notice.

2. Good educational background, college trained, preferably with some legal knowledge.

3. Good public speaking ability.

4. Strong self-control. They must carry on at long meetings when everyone is practically on the ropes, but must never crack. They must never let their personal views slip in.

There are 16 United States citizens on the payroll, but almost no pure Americans. Most are naturalized and many are of Russian origin. Rabinovitch says Anglo-Saxons generally are not good interpreters because they do not have command of language.

THERE are two types of interpretation at the U. N. One is called consecutive interpretation. It is the style used in the old days.

For example, every speech must be heard in French and English, the working languages. When the Russians speak, an interpreter takes notes, makes symbols, relies on his memory and translates it into English. When he is finished, another interpreter gives the French version.

Thus an hour's speech in Russian in the Security Council can stretch into three hours. The Security Council still insists on consecutive translations, so the delegates can think up what they want to say while a translation is being made.

The new method used everywhere else is called simultaneous translation. A delegate makes his speech and interpreters sitting in five booths translate him as he talks. If a Russian speaks, the Russian interpreter rests while the English, French, Spanish and Chinese interpreters handle his speech.

Simultaneous interpretation came into its own during the Nuernberg war crimes trials and was put into operation here when the trials ended. Some say it saves time, but others disagree. For a while, consecutive interpreters—the old-timers—feuded with the new system, vowing they never would step foot in a booth. But gradually they were won over and they are all one happy family now.

Geography and Gold 'Made' New Free Port

ESTABLISHMENT at Seattle of a foreign trade zone gives United States importers their third West Coast "free port" area. It also points up the harbor's success story, combining geography and gold.

Similar zones within ports, where dutiable imports may be stored and even processed in a limited way, duty-free pending their final disposition, have been set up in the past year at San Francisco and Los Angeles. Others function at New York and New Orleans.

As to the geography, Seattle is ideally located for dock installations, points out the National Geographic Society. Harbors embrace both sides of the city. As to gold:

In 1897 a steamship from Alaska stopped at the city, at that time a modest port town. Its cargo included $800,000 in gold from the Yukon River district—the first news of the Klondike strike.

Almost overnight Seattle was transformed into a "gold rush" port—the outfitting center and jumping-off point for the throngs going to the Klondike and the gathering place for those who had "struck it rich."

That was 52 years ago. Seattleites say that neither the city nor the harbor has slackened its pace since.

Today Seattle counts a half million residents, and ranks as the Northwest center of lumber and transport, aircraft manufacture and shipbuilding.

Louvain Gets First Books From CARE

By Shirley Barshay

LAST WEEK a thousand dollars' worth of new books arrived at the library of the University of Louvain in Belgium. If about five million dollars' worth more arrive, the Louvain Library will have regained its pre-war status.

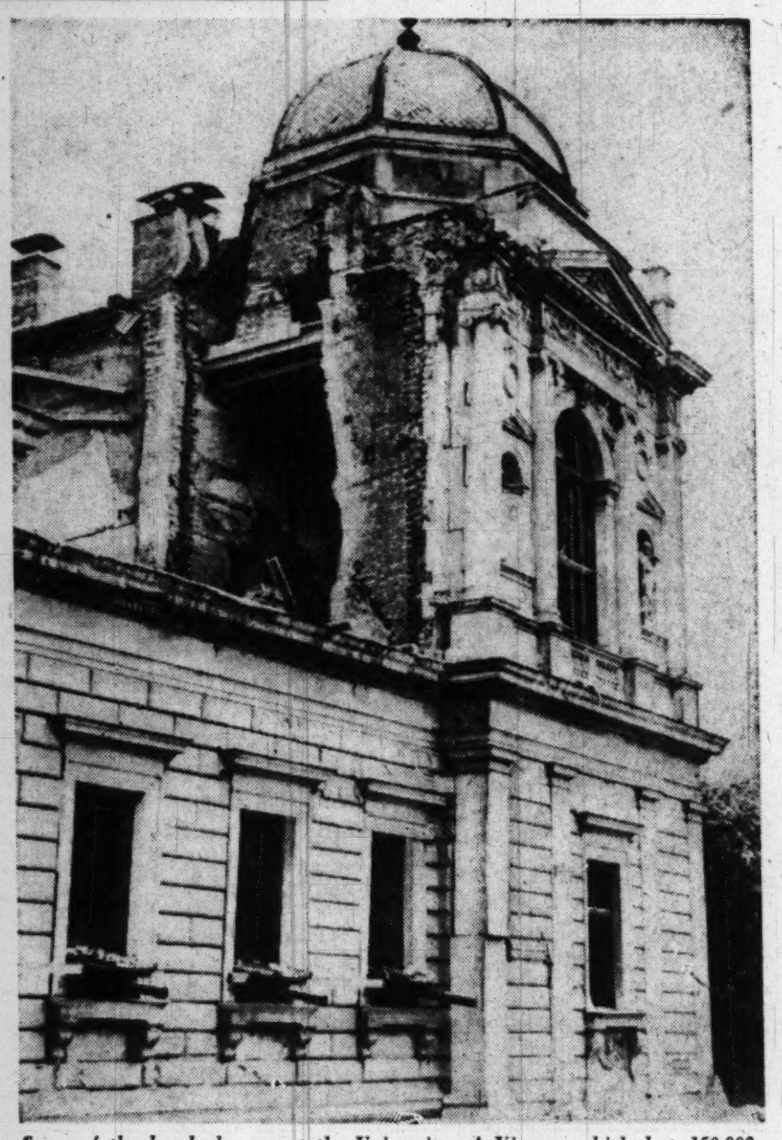
Add to that the cost of rebuilding thousands of demolished schools and restoring and restocking countless librarfes and museums, and you have some notion of the enormous task of educational and cultural reconstruction facing much of the world today.

The Louvain contribution was the first to be made under the new CARE book program, according to an announcement yesterday by Paul C. French, CARE'S executive director.

"We feel that the book program is a logical extension of CARE service," French said. "Just as the CARE food and textile program indicates a willingness on the part of the American people to share those aids in personal rehabilitation, so the book program is a symbol of aid in community rehabilitation."

A professional committee, headed by Dr. Luther Evans, Librarian of Congress, has selected 1200 titles of the latest outstanding scientific and technical books. These books will at least provide some connecting link with the vast and varied program in the United States in the last decade.

The whole program has been developed in cooperation with UNESCO, the Library of Congress, the American Library Association, medical and scientific associations and governmental authorities overseas. The advisory committee on voluntary foreign aid of the State Department has approved the project.



Some of the bomb damage at the University of Vienna, which lost 150,000 books during the war

Many Countries Listed

THE AIM is to help fill the needs of as many universities, libraries, medical centers and scientific institutions in as many countries as possible. So far, the list of countries to be served includes Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, the American, British and French zones of Germany and Berlin, Greece, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway and the United Kingdom.

With the assistance of UNESCO and the ministries of education in the various countries, CARE'S mission chiefs abroad have determined the areas of information which will be of the most immediate and practical value to the reconstruction effort. The major categories cover health and welfare, medicine, dentistry, applied science, nursing, agricultural and veterinary science, English language instruction and teacher training.

The almost rudimentary book needs are pointed up in letters received by CARE missions. From the Training School for Kindergarten Teachers in Frankfurt on Main came this request:

"Our building was occupied for more than five years by the Wehrmacht, and a proportion of our book stock was lost, which we have never been able to replace. We urgently need books on psychology, sociology, chemistry and physics, English instruction manuals and grammars, maternal and child welfare."

The Sankt Georgen College, also in Frankfurt, wrote: "The Sankt Georgen libraries were entirely desfroyed by air raids. In addition, we lost many reference works which our professors attempted to store in hiding places, but which were found and confiscated by the Gestapo.

"Our book budget is now inconsequential because of the expense of rebuilding our ruined dormitories and lecture halls. We cannot even afford the most urgently needed scientific publications or second-hand books."

Purchased in Bulk

FROM priority listings of each country's institutions in greatest need, and from the institutions' own priority requests. CARE makes it possible for Americans to contribute to this fundamental area of rehabilitation.

The physical operation of the book program is similar to that of CARE's food and textile package program, except that books will be sent to institutions rather than to individuals. Bulk purchases of books are made directly from the publishers.

Delivery of the books abroad is guaranteed at the publishers' list price, with no extra charge for transportation or distribution. The discounts allowed CARE by publishers and ECA subsidies for bulk shipping make this possible.

CARE hopes that the majority of the contributions will be undesignated, but donors of $10 or more may specify the country, type of institution and category or categories of books.

So far, CARE is the only organization providing this broad service. Of course, some help has already been sent from this country. For example, the Rockefeller Foundation gave to the University of Heidelberg a complete set of technical journals—the only one in Germany. And there is a constant pilgrimage of students and professional people from all over Germany to use the journals.

The directness of the CARE book program has already appealed to students in this country. Catholic University here is using a traveling poster exhibit describing the program, and students are making contributions. Library of Congress employes, who have been sending CARE food and textile parcels for more than a year, have already made one collection for the book program.

General Marshall, along with many other prominent individuals, has indorsed the program by saying that he hoped it "will receive the widespread support it deserves."

Reds Reported Ready to 'Cooperate'

By Edwin D. Grits
Post Reporter

SOME sort of working relation with the West is reported being sought by the Soviet Union as part of a growing conviction that war is no longer imminent despite increasing ideological rivalry.

Although military preparations have by no means ceased, Soviet leaders are said to be certain that the East and West have reached a point of political equilibrium in which war by either side would be infinite folly.

In view of this, the Kremlin's emergent foreign policy is expected to seek cooperation with the West on one hand, while simultaneously striving to solidify Communist positions throughout the world.

As for new conquests, many informed observers believe that only exceptional circumstances would tempt the Soviets to assume additional political risks now.

Soviet leaders, instead, are expected to direct their principal efforts toward consolidating admittedly important gains in Europe. These gains, incidentally, have been largely at the expense of the United States, which the Russians have propagandized as materialistic and dollar greedy.

Communist agitators, furthermore, are also reported extending their influence among hitherto apathetic Europeans by stepping up their portrayal of the Marshall Plan as a device to aid American big business rather than European recovery.

Design for Britain

COMMUNIST strategy elsewhere in the world is indirectly revealed in a lengthy appraisal of world revolution printed recently by the much-respected magazine Voprosy Ekonomiki (Problems of Economics). Written principally for domestic consumption, and certainly sanctioned by the Soviet hierarchy, the article particularly emphasizes the growth of party strength in various countries of the world.

While citing the growth of the English Communist Party from 15,000 members in 1938 to 50,000 in 1948, the article indicates the immediate necessity of dislodging right-wing Laborites from power and overcoming the influence of "trade union bureaucrats" in English workers' movements.

The article unwittingly reveals the nature of proposed Communist agitation in England by confessing that the traditional proemployer psychology of English workers is hard to overcome.

As for other European countries outside the Soviet orbit, the article declares that party membership and political influence have increased greatly since the war. Party membership is listed as follows without reference, however, to population figures:

Belgian Communist Party, 10,000 members (population, 8 million plus); Dutch, 50,000 members (population, 9 million plus); Danish, 60,000 members (population, 4 million plus); Swedish, 60,000 members (population, 7 million); Norwegian, 33,000 members (population, 3 million plus), and Finnish, 55,000 members (population, 4 million).

The article concedes that the growth of Communist Parties in Scandinavian countries has been slow and indicates that party leadership has failed to overcome the influence of social democracy in these countries.

74,000 in the U. S.

THE United States Communist Party, which is given a membership of 74,000 as of 1947, draws sympathetic treatment in the article, which points out that the party "has always been confronted with great difficulties . . ."

While emphasizing that the Communist Party in the United States has been opposed by big money and two "huge" parties, the article also slaps at the two trade unions, which, it says, "are headed by reactionary cliques, linked with capitalist monopolies and the highest Government administration."

"Their principal assignment," the article declares further, "is to defend the domination and profits of capital from the working class and to befog the class consciousness of workers."

Despite all this, according to the article, favorable conditions for increasing the influence of the party have been created by the existence of "huge proletarian masses" and the "difficult position of workers."

The article admits that the Communist Party in the United States is small, but says it wields a "great moral-political influence in the country among working people."

Cuba Called 'Colony'

IN ARGENTINA, whose population exceeds 16 million persons, the Communist Party is cited as having 30,000 members notwithstanding the "continued opposition" of local authorities as well as British-American interests.

Brazil, with a population of nearly 48 million, is said to have a Communist Party with 200,000 members. It is now outlawed.

Cuba, which the article describes as a United States colony, is listed as having 50,000 Communist "activists" in the ranks of the Popular Socialist Party which, the article says, is based on Marxism and Leninism. In addition to the 50,000 activists, the article claims that there are 200,000 other Communists in the country which, incidentally, has a population of more than five million.

In Chile, where the United States allegedly forced the government to outlaw the Communist Party, the article says there are 50,000 Communists. And, as in Cuba, the little Chilean republic of nearly six million persons is said to have an additional 200,000 Communist supporters among the workers.

Communist Party strength in other South American countries is given as follows: Mexico, population 23 million plus, 36,000 members; Peru, 7 million plus, 35,000 members; Uruguay, 2 million plus, 15,000 members; Colombia, 10 million plus, 15,000 members; Costa Rica, nearly 1 million, 7000 members; Panama, nearly 1 million, 5000 members; Ecuador, 3 million plus, 6000, and Nicaragua, 1 million plus, 1500 members.

The article amplifies Communist Party strength in South America by pointing out that 'there are no less than six million workers organized in trade unions of the Confederation of Workers of Latin America under the ideological and political influence of the Communists."

100-Fold Increase

THE Communist Party in Japan is revealed as growing with exceptional vigor. To support this claim, the article cites that there were only 1000 Communists in the ranks four years ago, then 50,000 at the end of 1946, and 100,000 in the middle of 1947.

The article also notes that 3,578,000 Japanese voted for Communist candidates in the election of last January 23. Communists, the article further states, are dominant in Japanese trade unions. The Congress of Japanese Trade Unions, which lists 1,500,000 members, is directed by Communists, the article contends.

The growth of the Communist Party in China is traced from 1926-27, when Communists listed 50,000 members, to 1948, when the membership was given as three million.

In Indonesia and Viet Nam, the article indicates Communist strength by declaring that 90 million people are "being led" by Communists in "carrying on a liberation struggle against military forces led by Dutch and French imperialists."

While no figures are cited, the article also contends that Communists are "working and struggling" effectively in Australia, New Zealand, Canada, in the Near East, Algeria, Tunis, Morocco and the Union of South Africa.

In Africa, particularly, Communist enthusiasm is emphasized in a report telling how the Second Congress of the Democratic African Association of French Colonies was forbidden to meet, so a secret conclave was held in a tropical forest last January, attended by one million members.

Reds Admit Ideal State Unattained

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

MOSCOW.—Complete communism, it is readily admitted here, has not yet been attained in the Soviet Union.

The Soviet people, led by the Communist Party, has built socialism and is "moving from socialism," Komsomol Pravda, the official organ of the young Communists, pointed out in a recent article.

The publication said the state form of dictatorship of the working class in this country is the Soviet power.

Stalin has said that since the revoluton the Soviet state has passed through two main phases in its development.

In the first phase, the main tasks were to suppress opposition of the capitalists and landowners who had been overthrown, to organize defense of the nation against interventionists, to restore national economy and prepare for abolition of the "exploiting" classes.

The main tasks of the second phase were organization of socialist economy throughout the country, elimination of the last remnants of capitalistic elements, organization of the cultural revolution and organization of a modern army for defense of the country.

Functions Changed

THAT, it is pointed out here, was the phase which ended with adoption of the new constitution of the USSR. Komsomol Pravda said the functions of the Soviet state have altered in accordance with the changing tasks.

The function of military suppression inside the country, Komsomol Pravda said, has been removed because there are no more exploiters. Instead, the function of protecting socialist property from thieves and embezzlers has made its appearance.

The function of the military defense of the country against attacks from outside still remains, as well as punitive organs and intelligence now directed against external foes and necessary for dealing with spies sent into this country by "bourgeois states."

Class distinctions, it is admitted here, do exist in the Soviet Union, but they will vanish with the highest phase of Communist society.

Red Star has published a lengthy discussion of class distinctions in the USSR by A. Makhov, candidate of philosophical sciences, in answer to a reader's question.

Two Classes Remain

"THERE remain in our country," he said, "two friendly classes—the workng class and the peasantry and, linked with them by all its roots, the Soviet intelligentsia.

"The alliance between the working class and the peasantry . . . has risen to the highest stage. It would be wrong, however, to deny that there are still distinctions between the working class and the peasantry of the USSR.

"The distinctions which still exist result primarily from the distincton between two forms of communal socialist property."

These are: (1) State property, (2) cooperative kolhoz, or collective farm, property.

Works, state farms, machine tractor stations and all state enterprises are the property of the whole people.

The collective farms are the property of the workers belonging to them. All the means of production are made communal in state enterprises. In the collective farms this applies only to the main means of production.

A part of the means of production—allotments attached to their houses, productive livestock, poultry and small items of equipment—remain the property of the collective farmers.

Workers Rated Ahead

"THIS MEANS," Makhov said, "that the decree of economic maturity in social relations is higher in state enterprises . . . than in the collectiv farm. The working class is also the bearer of a higher form of organization of collective labor."

The distinction between the working class and the peasantry is also to be seen in the manner by which they receive their incomes.

The workers receive their incomes in the form of weekly wages from national funds. The collective farm workers draw a certain fraction of the monetary and national income of their collective farm according to working days. At the same time they draw a part of their income from their own personal holdings.

"By its political experience," said Makhov, "accumulated throughout decades of class struggle, by the degree of its organization, unity and social awareness, the working class is higher than the other social groups of the Soviet population.

"Stalin teaches," he concluded, "that class distinctions will vanish in the highest phase of Communist society."

He'd Love to Go Fishing, But . . .

Our Paris Envoy's a Busy Man

By Carl Hartman
Associated Press Staff Writer

PARIS.—It takes more than striped pants and a gift for French small talk to make an Ambassador to Paris, but one Virginia gentleman farmer has found that they help.

David Kirkpatrick Este Bruce, one-time member of the Virginia Legislature, is evidence that it's no job for a cookie-pusher, either. He wears the striped pants only when he has to, and that is only for a small part of his-seven-day week. He has to do a lot of fast talking in both French and English and some of it is pretty big talk, at that.

"I don't want to make it seem like the toughest job in the world," the new Ambassador confides, in a drawl that strikes an average between his Baltimore birth and his Piedmont (Va.) home. But it doesn't leave much time for hunting, fishing, the family or serious music."

Take one of his average days in a hot, droughty Paris July:

At 9:30 he arrives at the United States Embassy, a handsome, four-story white stone building on the huge Place de la Concorde. Unlike his predecessor, Jefferson Caffery, Bruce walks in unnoticed and takes the elevator to his second floor office. Caffery, now Ambassador to Egypt, was schooled by career in the formalities of diplomatic protocol. When he arrived, the United States Marine guards at the door snapped to attention, one stepped forward to take his briefcase, and the pair marched ceremoniously up the grand stairway.

On this day—July 11—Bruce took up a good part of his morning with two formal visits: One to Portuguese Ambassador Marcello Mathias, and the other to Soviet Ambassador Alexander Bogomolov.

"That's protocol," he explained. "A new ambassador has to call on each of his colleagues."

There are 62 countries represented by diplomatic missions in Paris, and in two months of service Bruce hasn't been able to work through the list.

The afternoon was largely occupied with visitors—the Mayor of Versailles to see about completing the monument to Generals LaFayette and Pershing, an American with ideas on the place of small business in the Marshall Plan, the head of the French news agency, a well known American newspaperman, three executives of a big New York bank, an American who recently refused a Cabinet post, a member of the military attache's staff, a former president of the Export-Import Bank.

"The job is mostly seeing people," Bruce told this reporter. "I get about 12 visitors a day, in addition to the people I see from the embassy. Most of them want something done."

Bruce leaned back in his leather swivel chair, rested one leg on a desk drawer opened for the purpose, and filled a pipe with the pure Virginia tobacco he has sent to him regularly from the Piedmont country.

That has would never do (neither of them would, for that matter) for a levee at St. James's Palace, but David K. E. Bruce would rather go fishing than to St. James's anyway

French a la Bruce

HE EXPLAINED that his luncheons are usually official functions, whether he is host or guest, and they often involve speechmaking. Same is true of dinners. In his speeches, which average two a week, he departs from the usual ambassadorial style, which requires the reading of a dull address, written in precise academic phrases by the best French stylist on the embassy staff. Bruce improvises his own chats in a self-taught French of which he admits he is no master. Taking no account of grammatical niceties he likes to tell jokes and stories, some of which may be old to Americans, but sound fresh and above all, spontaneous, in French.

Twice a week he gives a reception for 300 to 400 guests at the embassy residence, and on most evenings there are smaller cocktail parties.

There is no day off Sundays. Bruce usually has a cornerstone to lay or a monument to dedicate.

"Some day," he muses, "I'm going to get myself a little place in the country."

In the past 10 years he has seen little of the place he already had, a 4000-acre farm near Brookneal, Va., about 45 miles from Lynchburg. In 1940 he became chief representative of the American Red Cross in Britain and in 1942 joined the U. S. Army Air Force—he had been a second lieutenant of field artillery in World War I.

With the rank of colonel, he headed the European section of the Office of Strategic Services, a semisecret war-time bureau that supplied confidential information on world affairs for the planners in the armed forces. In 1947 President Truman appointed him Assistant Secretary of Commerce, and the next year he was named to head the Marshal Plan mission to France.

Home-Rule Bogey

If endless talk to prevent legislative action is a filibuster, the home-rule hearings before Representative Oren Harris are getting close to the point of qualifying. As the hearings go on and on, the chance of getting action on the Senate-passed Kefauver bill fades. Mr. Harris says that he would like to end the hearings, yet he appears happy to listen to any kind of lengthy argument against the bill. Of course, if the committee were plowing new ground, all this detailed discussion would be necessary and desirable. But every argument that is advanced has been heard many times. In these circumstances there is good reason for the irritation of Melvin D. Hildreth and other supporters of the bill who well understand the time-wasting tactics that are being employed.

It is especially painful to note that Representative Sam Hobbs, who has given support to many forward-looking causes, took an hour and a half to repeat discredited arguments as to the constitutionality of the bill. He is reported to have contended that it would be unconstitutional to elect a city council here in spite of the fact that local city councils were elected throughout the first 70 years of the District's existence. For that matter, the District Commissioners continue to exercise part of the ordinance-making power that keeps the city functioning. The Kefauver bill transfers this power to an elected council. It is inconceivable that Congress would be free to delegate a segment of its authority over the District to an appointed board but not to a council chosen by the people.

To be sure, the Kefauver bill also gives the proposed District council broader powers to legislate for the District, but this delegation of power is carefully safeguarded by the congressional veto. In other words, legislative measures adopted by the District council would become effective only after laying before Congress for 60 days subject to being upset by concurrent resolution. This device for the accomplishment of governmental ends that Congress is not well adapted to perform has previously been employed without any serious encroachment upon the legislative power. We think it would be short-sighted not to use this means of relieving Congress of the burden of acting as a municipal legislature when it is so hard pressed with other duties.

Probably shabbiest of all Representative Hobbs' agruments was the crack about Congress resolving "never again" after its experience with Boss Shepherd. Governor Shepherd was never elected by the people. He happens to have been an appointee of President Grant. So far as we can see, the fact that he turned out to be a spendthrift who outran his authority has nothing whatever to do with the carefully worked out plan for giving the District an elected council and a city manager subject to its control.

Welfare Vs. Welfare

Some irritation is being caused by sundry explanations of the British crisis which pin the responsibility upon America. For instance, on Monday Mr. Bevin hinted that the "welfare state" in America is in some degree responsible for the British plight. He means that in America farm prices are not "free," but supported; so that the British are compelled to pay these higher prices for their food imports from America. He seems to have interpolated hastily that as a citizen of a welfare state, he could not complain about a welfare state in America.

This seems to be the first time that a British spokesman has acknowledged that the United States is not the country of "unbridled capitalism" of Sir Hartley Shawcross' description. To be sure, food from America goes to Britain at supported prices, but a great deal is supplied free under the Marshall Plan. And why were supports necessary in America? Because of the need to be the granary first of a warring world and then of a starving world. Mr. Bevin does not mention that the United States is right now debating the demobilization of the supported farm price structure.

No such debate seems to be in progress in Britain. On the contrary, what Mr. Bevin is looking to is the over-all development by Britain of the rigid "price structure" for British exports of raw materials which America in the case of a few commodities now finds outmoded. In Britain this addiction to price rigidity, contrary to the American system, runs through the entire economy—all aimed at shielding Britain from either currency or commercial competition. These controls are something different from socialism. Indeed, only 20 per cent of the business in Britain is socialized, or, as they call it, nationalized. What is often mistaken for socialism is the wartime controls, the perpetuation of which in great part have frozen incentive and frustrated Britain's effort to compete in world markets. This newspaper, after an on-the-spot study of the Labor government's plans when it came to office, gave controls first place as impediments to progress. It said, December 9, 1945, "Perhaps the worst mistake of the Attlee government was to ask and obtain extension of war powers for five more years."

Take, as an example of controls which have strangled the British, those over imports. Britain is the world's greatest importer. Under the Labor government the government does the buying, selling to the factories and the food stores. Most of the things which at present are going into British manufactures were bought on long-term contracts in a sellers' market. They were, as a result, bought at abnormally high prices. That is the reason that while American prices are going down, British prices are going up. Here is the great difference between the two economies; the British economy, contrary to the American, is controlled up to the hilt.

Not to make these differences clear is to be unhelpful both in the quest for "the permanent solution" of British troubles and in promoting understanding on the part of the British people. Mr. Bevin says, "The United States is as much a welfare state as we are, only in a different form." It is the form that matters.

Humanists At Bay

The bicentennial celebration of the birth of Johann Wolfgang von Goethe which has just ended at Aspen, Colo., developed into a sort of counteroffensive by the champions of humanist rationalism against the spirit of the twentieth century. This is not inappropriate, for Goethe was himself one of the greatest avatars of the humanist genius. The real hero of his great dramatic poem, Faust, is of course the audacious imagination of man. Dr. Thomas Mann in a bicentenary essay published recently in the New York Times Magazine has described this poem as "the acme of humanism," and Goethe himself as one in whom the Gothic and demoniac genius of Germany had been successfully harmonized with the urbane and classical spirit of the Mediterranean civilization. He represented, in other words, that combination of intellectual vigor, imaginative boldness, sensible refinement and universality of interest that the nineteenth century understood by "culture."

Goethe, as Dr. Mann admits, was in no sense a liberal or a democrat. He had no faith in the masses, and therefore none in popular government; he was one of the prophets of the cult of the "civilized minority." Nevertheless, Faust was chosen by Tocqueville as an example of the sort of poetry of which a democratic age would be capable. "Among a democratic people," he wrote, "poetry will not be fed with the legends or the memorials of old traditions; . . . but man remains and the poet needs no more. The destinies of mankind, mankind himself, taken aloof from his country and his age and standing in the presence of nature and of God, his doubts, his rare prosperities and inconceivable wretchedness, will become the chief, if not the sole, theme of poetry among these nations."

The relation between the humanistic ethos and the democratic doctrine is more or less obvious. The notion that men are qualified to govern themselves must depend in the last analysis upon an optimistic conception of human nature and human dignity. Now the historical and philosophical basis of this conception has been a prior conception of man as a rational creature. This basis, however, has been severely shaken by the more influential philosophies of the twentieth century, particularly Freudianism. The "depth psychologies," which have given us the notion of man as a creature of dark and destructive instincts, have seemed to find their confirmation in all the horrors and cruelties of the last four decades and the incalculable devastation of two world wars.

The effort of the human individual to reassert his importance in such a world has taken two somewhat contradictory tendencies, both of which found expression at Aspen. One is exemplified in the new philosophy of existentialism, which concedes the absence in the universe of any rational principle, rationally comprehensible by man, and rests its case for human dignity on the ability of the human spirit to accept the tragedy of existence in an utterly meaningless world. This doctrine was voiced by the celebrated Spanish philosopher Don Jose Ortega y Gasset, who, in speaking recently to the bicentennial celebrants, observed:

> Life is impossible without illusion. The world experience of Europe has tried them all—all except one on which it is now about to embark, the illusion of being disillusioned.

The general tendency, however, has been to seek a new sanction for the role of reason in human life. The defenders of reason found a redoubtable champion in Dr. Albert Schweitzer, whose admirers have acclaimed him as the twentieth century embodiment of the sixteenth century dream of the Universal Man. Speaking at Aspen some days after Senor Ortega, Dr. Schweitzer cited the personality of Goethe as an example of the triumph of the rational over the instinctual man. Goethe as thinker, he insisted, is even greater than Goethe as poet or than Goethe as natural scientist.

Share Or Shutout

We hope that President Truman does not really mean that his recent atomic conference was relatively unimportant. It may well be that the somewhat sinister connotation placed on the meeting resulted from overplay—overplay invited by the naive notion that Mr. Truman could somehow hold a secret meeting of 16 top Administration and congressional leaders in the glass cage known as Blair House. But atomic relationships with Great Britain, which it is now pretty definitely known prompted the conference, are of the gravest importance to this country. It is the part of less than candor to attempt to minimize them.

Britain knows how to make an atomic bomb. More than a year ago she announced that she was going ahead with atomic weapons development. There are many reasons why, under the division of military labor that should accompany the Atlantic Pact, it would be foolish for the British to duplicate the weapons program of this country. The strongest representations ought to be made to dissuade the British in light of the defense guaranty that now exists. But this country cannot dictate what they should do. Suppose they decide to go ahead anyhow?

It is fatuous to think that the United States could prevent Britain from atomic weapons development, or enhance its own monopoly, by remaining standoffish. If the British determine to push ahead, and claim part of the supply of uranium now sold to this country, then the question becomes one of coordination. The issue is not demands or barter, but how to fit the British program into an implementation of American security, as well as that of the Atlantic community. In other words, the smart thing to do is to make sure that the two countries evolve the best program possible by sharing information and making use of one another's experience. It is pertinent in this context to quote General Bradley's observation on military aid, given in an interview with the London Sunday Times: "American arms will be of greater value to our security in Europe than if they remained in our own storehouses."

Inasmuch as the processes in military and industrial processing of atomic materials are about 85 per cent the same, it is difficult to dissociate industrial from military information. In other words, industrial benefits probably would flow from military cooperation. It is difficult to believe, however, that the ban on exchange of industrial information in the McMahon Act was intended to prevent steps that would add to American security. Plainly the international control of atomic energy envisioned three years ago is not now feasible. The next best thing is to face reality and evolve a new policy in accordance with American interests and responsibilities under the Atlantic Pact. Here is a subject requiring the open discussion which the secretive President Truman was saying only the other day at Chicago is the foundation of this country's foreign policy.

Press Intimidation

The House of Representatives was recently treated by Representative W. Kingsland Macy to one of the most versatile exhibitions of windmill-tilting in its history. Mr. Macy, unsolicited as far as we know, undertook a championship of the press against what he termed an attempt to intimidate it on the part of Federal Judge Samuel H. Kaufman who presided over the Hiss trial.

In the course of that trial, a New York newspaper had published some allegations concerning the defendant which were not then a part of the evidence presented in court, and the defense counsel had suggested that the judge cite the newspaper for contempt. The judge declined to do this; but speaking in general terms about the danger that newspaper comment might exercise an improper influence on the jury, he remarked: "What the court can do about it, I do not know, but after the conclusion of this trial that subject should be considered, either by the court or through some other method."

Quoting this observation of Judge Kaufman, Mr. Macy said to the House: "Mr. Speaker, I label such an unprecedented and unheard-of statement by a Federal court judge a direct threat to the freedom of the press . . . What did the judge mean by such a challenge? In the history of American courts, I do not believe such a similar statement has ever been made. What plans did he have to make the American press succumb to his will?"

Gee whizz, we didn't even know that we'd been hurt. What the judge meant by such a challenge, we suppose, was what many a judge has meant on many an occasion in the past, that he did not propose to have trial by newspaper substituted for trial by jury in his court. Judge Kaufman's expression of concern on this score, so far from being unprecedented, reflects a widespread and sometimes justified impatience with the press on the part of the whole American judiciary, State as well as Federal.

Juries are very rarely locked up nowadays throughout the course of a trial, and the insulation of them from pressures outside the courtroom is as difficult as it is vital to the fair administration of justice. A defendant in a criminal trial is entitled to be judged exclusively on the basis of evidence admissible in a court of law, and in an atmosphere free from prejudice and excitement. Newspapers have occasionally nullified this basic right. We yield to no one, not even Representative Macy, in zeal for the freedom of the press. But the right to a fair trial is pretty important, too.

Catholic Schools

The Rev. R. C. Hartnett, editor of the Jesuit weekly, America (letter published July 18), objects to my statement in my letter of July 9: "Protestants doubtless in the aggregate have more schools than our Roman Catholic brethren." He terms this statement "odd" and offers certain statistics from some authorities in an effort to refute it. He ends with the implication, based on his presumption that Catholics have more schools than other church groups, that the Catholics should be favored with extra tax aids, quoting Ray Gibbons, "In view of the fact that almost all parochial schools are Roman Catholic, it would be, at the present time, practically impossible for the Government to aid all religious bodies equally."

In the United States, Protestants have 242 colleges and universities against the Roman Catholics' 124. In addition Protestants operate 164 theological seminaries against 56 operated by Roman Catholics. These figures are obtained from American Universities and Colleges, 1948 edition, published by the American Council on Education, and from the Yearbook of the Churches, 1948 edition, published for the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Mr. Hartnett concludes by suggesting, "If Mr. Dawson means by 'schools' such units as Sunday schools, he should have said so." The fact that Mr. Hartnett makes this suggestion shows that he is painfully aware of the grave question, widely raised, as to the real character of the Roman Catholic parochial schools, of which the Catholics admittedly have more.

I am conscious of the Catholic contention that their parochial schools are generally recognized as standard schools. But in every case, are these parochial agencies of the church in fact essentially different in actual character, whatever the difference in dogma and methods, from Protestant Sunday schools? In New Mexico, where the Roman Catholics virtually took over many public schools and substituted parochial types of instruction, complaining citizens who succeeded by a court suit in ousting the priests and nuns with all their religious paraphernalia charged that the children were being deprived of proper instruction in subjects regularly taught in the public schools.

Arms for Europe

According to Admiral Zacharias in his letter of July 21, the purpose of the Atlantic Pact is mainly psychological. It is to let Russia know that we mean to fight her if she attacks western Europe. The question of arms for Europe is "a futile gesture with costs which would seriously hamper, if not cripple, our more effective efforts in . . . economic and political rehabilitation of Europe."

If Europe needs only the words and not the arms, the President could have embellished the Truman Doctrine into a Monroe Doctrine for western Europe and saved a lot of the Senate's time.

While I agree with Admiral Zacharias as to the futility of arms and feel that such an executive pronouncement would have sufficed, I do not think that Europe does. Europe is obsessed, as was France with her Maginot Line with the will-o'-the-wisp of physical security.

Even 60 fully armed divisions delaying the Russians at the Rhine would not guarantee security of western Europe against eventual Russian occupation. Even the destruction of Russia's cities with the atom bomb would not be conclusive. In the final analysis we would have to invade Europe and conquer Russia's armies.

If, as Admiral Zacharias suspects, the Russians are astute enough to know all this, no Atlantic Pact will deter them; no arming of western Europe will deter them; no atom bomb will deter them. The only thing they fear is a strong, united and resolute United States. It is such a United States that they must weaken with unnecessary expenditures; it is such a United States that they must disorganize with internal strife (labor war and race war); it is such a United States that they must discourage and drive back into its isolationist shell where it was in 1940.

Atomic Rider

Just how silly can so-called scientists become in this hot Washington weather? The question is inspired by the July 20 letter signed by Robert D. Stiehler, chairman, Washington Association of Scientists.

That H. R. 4177, which provides for loyalty investigations of all persons granted scholarships by the Atomic Energy Commission, and which is designed to protect the rights and liberties of these United States, could be interpreted by a group who admit they are scientists as being a threat to our country, and an imitator of Nazi Germany, can only be blamed on the weather.

McCarran's Role

Your cartoon of July 11 shows Senator McCarran seated upon a bottle in which is displayed a young girl labeled "Displaced Persons Bill." In view of the recent disclosures it would be much nearer the truth had you represented the person in the bottle as a "Gerhard Eisler" or some other notorious subversive character whose entrance into the United States was achieved with the connivance of those high up in the State Department or members of the White House family.

A second correction should show Uncle Sam smiling proudly and confidently at Senator McCarran, a man who has repeatedly turned down lucrative sinecure positions to remain on the fighting line where he is so greatly needed.

Then add to the gloomy gentlemen representing the Democrats and the Republicans (just so that they can be identified) the long ears of the donkey and the solid ivory tusks of the elephant. What a picture you would then have of the men of our times!

Transit Radio

Advertising is not a necessary part of the transportation business and radio is not a necessary part of advertising, yet the noisy radio in streetcars and buses continues to be a nuisance. To compel passengers to hear advertising when they wish quiet is such a brutal overriding of the inherent rights of Americans that it seems to me that "free" Americans are free only to take what is handed out to them, even if it is of communistic method or nature.

R. S. WHITE.

"Frank Murphy"

Having been associated for five years with Justice Murphy as his law clerk, I feel compelled to register a most emphatic dissent to your editorial of July 20 marking the untimely end of a most noble life. Your remarks misconceive, in my opinion, the nature of the philosophy which guided the justice in his actions, as well as the philosophy which underlies the judicial process itself.

Preliminarily, it should be noted that any fair appraisal of his judicial career should take into account the fact that Justice Murphy did something more than spread his "humanitarianism" over the pages of the Supreme Court reports. Indeed, the major portion of his judicial opinions—and especially of those of his representing the views of the court—was devoted to subjects other than civil rights. His writings delve deeply into such topics as the commerce clause, taxation, bankruptcy, procedure, torts, patents and various other of the countless problems that come before the court.

The major indictment which you make of his career is that his "humanitarianism predominated over his attachment to law and order" and that in court problems he "could usually be counted upon to take the humanitarian rather than the legal point of view if the two should be in conflict." In a sense, this allegation is one of the highest compliments that can be paid to any judge, mortal or otherwise. To be able to temper justice with mercy, to be so equipped as to give effective protection to the constitutional rights of all citizens despite pedantic and needless technicalities, is to effectuate the loftiest ideals of our system of justice.

It need hardly be pointed out in this day of relative enlightenment that the glib phrase "law and order" has long been used as a mask for some of the most illegal and disorderly actions in all history. But even if we take the phrase in its less sinister sense, as representing legal principles which should prevail in appropriate instances, I submit that there does not and should not exist any real conflict between "humanitarianism" and "law and order."

That misconception is that there is a set of firm legal principles, couched in legal terms, that exists over and above all other considerations, principles that inexorably lead to the right and just result in any given case. The judicial process is a most fluid one by its very nature. Legal principles are in a constant state of flux; they grow and expand and contract; new ones are born and old ones die.

The high calling of the judge is to bring proper and impersonal considerations to bear in applying, formulating, creating or destroying principles of law in appropriate situations. And not the least of those considerations is what you have called "humanitarianism." A component part of any just legal system is a decent respect for the individual and a humane regard for the preservation of those rights which individuals, as such, hold dear.

Much the same type of considerations are properly brought to bear in the administrative process. For example, Justice Murphy's actions in the sit-down strike era cannot be ascribed solely to his "humanitarianism," as opposed to "law and order." It is of the essence of statesmanlike administration of "law and order" to know when and when not to use force of arms. Justice Murphy so acted to preserve "law and order" without needless bloodshed while ultimately achieving the desired result.

Accordingly, Justice Murphy had no occasion to attempt, as you put it, "to reconcile his humanitarianism with a judicial robe." What he did try to do, and what I believe he succeeded in doing in a superlative degree, was to inject a large but proper amount of "humanitarianism" into his judicial tasks.

You suggest that his opinion in the Christoffel case is shocking, apparently because he disregarded legal principles in preference to "humanitarianism." Yet it must be remembered that this opinion, despite its authorship, represents the considered views of four other members of the Court. And among those four is Justice Frankfurter, whom no one would suggest is deficient in his knowledge of legal principles and in his ability to think in legal terms.

Confusion In Belgium

By Andre Visson

Monarchy Issue

BRUSSELS.—One should not be surprised that people outside of Belgium are so little interested in the Belgian political crisis and that so little space is allotted to it in the French and British newspapers. Even here in Belgium, outside of the political circles, very few Belgians appear to be excited about the outcome of the crisis which resulted from their elections held on June 26.

The Belgians are universally known for their common sense. And I suspect that the indifference with which the man in the street here follows the developments of the political crisis is quite revealing. The Belgians must feel that despite the great issues which appear to be at stake, very little change, if any, may appear once the political dust settles down.

The problem of the throne remains, of course, the number one issue. Will the political crisis resulting from the national elections bring King Leopold back to his country—or will it, on the contrary, give a final legal status to his present exile?

The Belgians have been divided on the Leopold problem since the end of the war and the last elections merely confirmed that they continue to be far apart. The real trouble is that instead of helping to bring out the respective strength of the pro- and anti-Leopoldists, the elections have only contributed to increase the confusion.

NO BELGIAN political party had a clear cut majority in the old Parliament. The pro-Leopoldist and clerical Social-Christians had a plurality, having obtained 42.53 per cent in the 1946 elections. The anti-Leopoldist Socialists, with 31.59 per cent of the popular vote in 1946, were the second strongest party. But their sharp division on the royal issue did not prevent them from cooperating in a coalition government which achieved remarkable economic results and made of Belgium an oasis of free enterprise and prosperity in the postwar western Europe.

In the June elections the pro-Leopoldist Social Christians increased their 1946 plurality only by 1 per cent. Their popular vote rose from 42.53 to 43.52 per cent. But the new Belgian electoral system, aimed at favoring the larger parties, translated this insignificant gain into an impressive victory when it came to the allotment of seats in the lower chamber and in the Senate. The Social Christians obtained the majority of the seats in the Senate (54 out of 106) and fell short by two seats of a majority in the House of Representatives. (105 out of 212.)

PAUL VAN ZEELAND, the most pro-Leopold leader of the Social Christians, tried very hard to use this technical parliamentary majority obtained by his party to precipitate a favorable solution of the royal problem. But he was made to realize that it would have been too adventurous to form a homogeneous Social Christian government which would bring Leopold back to Brussels. And the Liberals (in the American political terminology they would be described as progressive conservatives) who obtained 15.25 per cent of the popular vote in the June elections—and one third of whom may be in favor of the return of King Leopold—have been unanimous in rejecting the idea of a Social-Christian-Liberal coalition government presided over by Paul van Zeeland.

Under these circumstances the Belgian political parties must once more agree on a coalition government headed by a man who would be acceptable to all the coalition parties. Three coalition formulas are possible: the continuation of the old coalition of the Social Christians with the Socialists; a tripartite coalition of the Social Christians, Socialists and Liberals; or, should the Socialists reject the idea of a coalition and prefer to go into opposition, a Social Christian-Liberal coalition. Only a Socialist decision to become an opposition party would eliminate from the Belgian cabinet Paul-Henri Spaak, who since 1937 has been responsible for his country's foreign policy. Under all other formulas he is expected to remain in the Belgian Foreign Office.

But whatever will be the final coalition formula, all Belgian political parties agree that it is impossible to delay any longer the finding of a solution of the Leopold problem.

Matter of Fact

Siam's Solution Is to 'Cave In'

By Stewart Alsop

BANGKOK, Siam.—Like almost everything else in this peculiar country, the interview had a distinct low comedy flavor. The Siamese was one of Siam's large collection of former prime ministers, a man of some distinction and real intelligence. Yet he looked, like all Siamese, about half his age, as he sat in a window seat wriggling his bare toes, laughing and telling jokes.

Reluctantly, an attempt was made to introduce a serious note into the conversation. What would be likely to happen, the former premier was asked, if Indo-China as well as China fell to the Communists, and pressure was then brought on Siam? He giggled. "We cave in," he said, giggling merrily.

Despite the giggles, this prediction was probably a perfectly accurate one, as things now stand, in the view of the best observers here. For many years, Siam has been the only independent state in southeast Asia. For all these years Siam has maintained its independence, not by fighting for it, but by a carefully calculated policy of caving in when caving in seemed sensible.

'Sensible' Collaboration

THE most recent cave-in occured during the war. "Field Marshal" Phibul Songgram was Premier then as now. When the Japanese attack seemed imminent, he asked the British what help he could expect. The hard pressed British responded with a stirring message from Winston Churchill, but no arms and no men. Premier Phibul promptly arranged a deal with the Japanese, which permitted Siam to avoid bloodshed, to retain a considerable measure of internal independence and to escape most of the disagreeable consequences of Japanese occupation.

Phibul served a brief term in jail after the Japanese surrender, as it was thought that this would please the Allies. A good many Siamese dislike him on various grounds—he has shot a number of politicians and his incompetent secret police annoy people. But few Siamese really resent his collaboration with the Japanese. It seems to them the only sensible thing to have done.

It is not likely that Premier Phibul will arrange the caving process unless the Communist drive south (which is in many ways parallel to the Japanese drive south in 1940 and 1941) gains sufficient momentum to threaten Siam. Phibul has taken a strong anti-Communist line and this rules him out. Yet someone will doubtless be found to do the only sensible thing.

This would not necessarily mean a full-fledged Communist regime. Eventually, no doubt, this cheerful country would be transformed into a "People's Democracy," complete with five-year plans and Marxist-Leninist exhortations to the workers. But at first it is more likely that Siam would merely become a fellow traveler of Communist power, just as Siam was a fellow traveler of Japanese power, adjusting its policies to suit Communist needs.

British Nightmare

FOR Communist purposes, this would be enough, simply because it would make the British job in Malaya almost impossible. Already the British are having trouble enough with a handful of Chinese guerillas. The British nightmare is that Siam might become a Communist safe haven, a source of supply, and an avenue of infiltration across the long, irregular Siamese border. If Malaya fell, Indonesia would be threatened—the process has no end.

The conclusion is obvious. Siam will cave in if pressure is exerted from one side, and if, as in 1941, there is a vacuum on the other side. Something very like a vacuum now exists. The question is how to fill it.

Siam has an army of some 30 thousand reasonably good infantrymen, sufficient to assure at least the internal security of the country, except that they are very badly armed. Siam is looking for arms. A dribble of light weapons has come from the British, on a cash on the barrelhead basis. More than a dribble is necessary, not only to help assure Siam's internal security, but also as a reminder that Mao Tse-Tung's victorious armies are not the only source of power in Asia.

Yet small arms alone are not enough to bring this lesson home, either here or elsewhere. What is needed above all is a firm, clear American policy, which will convince southeast Asia, first, that the United States is not interested in restoring colonialism in Asia; second, that the United States is nevertheless not prepared to witness the substitution of a Communist imperialism for a European imperialism; and, third, that the United States is a power to be reckoned with.

To devise such a policy, and to make it stick, is as hideously difficult a problem as has ever confronted the United States. Yet it is not enough for the American policy makers merely to throw up their hands in despair, for then the giggling prediction of the former Prime Minister, with all its dire meaning, will certainly come true, and not only in Siam.

Pain Short-Circuits

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Editor

NEW YORK—When you feel pain, it's because of short circuits in nerves, says Dr. A. L. Soresi of New York.

These shorts are much like the short circuits in electric wires, he writes in reports to medical journals. The nerve short circuit idea is a new theory of pain, and how to stop chronic pain.

Nerve currents, he says, act much like electric current. When an electric wire is shorted, the current leaks out, following the line of least resistance.

Nerve currents also can leak out, and then spread chaotically when the nerves or their insulation are damaged, Dr. Soresi holds. The volleys of nerve impulses travel along other nerves and bombard nerve receptors that aren't supposed to receive or register sensations or feelings. The result is pain.

No 'Pain Nerves'

THERE has long been a medical idea that there are special nerve endings or receptors whose job it is to register pain. Dr. Soresi disagrees, saying that no such pain nerves have ever been found. To support his theory, he cited experiments by numerous scientists. His theory is:

Short circuits of nerves in the brain lead to mental upsets, including insanity. When they occur in nerves leading from the brain, they can cause convulsions and contractions of muscles. Pain comes when the shorts occur in nerves carrying messages back to the brain.

Some nerves have insulating sheaths. Others are naked, but are insulated by body fluids and tissues. Anything that damages this delicate insulation can result in short circuiting of nerve currents.

Dr. Soresi declares that "pain is not a normal sensation and has no useful function." He says it is not true that pain is something that protects you from danger.

Touching a hot stove causes pain. There has been an idea that such pain was protective, making you draw your hand away before the burn became serious. But Dr. Soresi says the pain occurs only because damage already has been done, and some nerves have been shorted.

One experiment showed that the nerves which are supposed to carry the pain messages are the slowest ones in transmission speed, he said. He argues that this doesn't make sense if pain is supposed to be a protective warning.

Blocked by Drugs

PERMANENT short circuits lead to incessant pain, Dr. Soresi says. He reports that it often can be controlled by blocking all the pathways that the short-circuited nerve currents could take in traveling back to the brain.

This blocking can be done by injecting anesthetic drugs into certain collections of nerve cells near the spine, called the spinal ganglia. These are centers for passage of the impulses. The drugs destroy or devitalize these cells, and the pain messages don't get through.

Only the nerves carrying messages to the brain are blocked, and there isn't any interference with outgoing messages governing movement of muscles or working of abdominal organs, Dr. Soresi adds.

Blocking the spinal ganglia "will effectively and safely control pain originating in all organs from the neck to the toes." He urges that it be tried before surgery is attempted.

"Man," he says, "is a bioelectronic apparatus, to which intellect has been added. The nerve cells of the body are electronic devices, and are as delicately affected by upsets as ordinary electronic devices are."

THE LIGHT from a fluorescent lamp doesn't go out the instant you flip the switch. It keeps bouncing back and forth among atoms inside the tube for a few millionths of a second.

This delay is being studied by scientists of the Westinghouse Research Laboratories in hopes of discovering new ways of making such lamps more efficient, improving electronic tubes, making better electronic switches for radar or perhaps finding new ways of producing light.

For greater value in gasoline, buy it in the morning when it's cool.

Gasoline expands and takes up more room when it's warm. A gallon doen't contain as much actual fuel on a hot afternoon as in the coolness of the morning, explains Dr. Waldo Kliever, director of research for the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. He suggests gasoline should be bought by the pound, not the gallon.

One gas tank on a new plane holds 9060 pounds of fuel at 77 degrees F., but only 8700 at 120 degrees. At 25 below zero, it would hold 9603 pounds, he said. In every case, the tank would be full to the brim.

Heat is used to make television in some new work by the Radio Corp. of America and the Wright Aeronautical Corp. The heat rays transmit pictures the same as light, and a special tube changes the heat rays into light so that engineers can watch heat as it starts to damage jet plane parts. Television with heat rays shows hot spots in metal before they become visible in light. Light shows hot places when they turn red. The heat rays show the same spots before they become red. On the television screen these still invisible hot spots show a gray color.

An automatic blood pressure recorder invented by Dr. Warren E. Gilson is a help to both the patient and the doctor. Dr. Gilson is assistant professor of medical electronics at the University of Wisconsin Medical School.

The recorder operates like the manual kind, with an inflatable cuff on the patient's arm. Moving penwriters record the rise and fall of the blood pressure on a moving graph, and record the intensity of blood pressure sounds.

The machine "minimizes patient discomfort by sudden and automatic release of cuff pressure," Dr. Gilson said.

"Also, it is possible to get an accurate and simultaneous record that may be kept and studied. The machine can be set to take readings every 30 seconds, 60 seconds, 5 minutes, 30 minutes or 60 minutes. The doctor need not be in the room when readings are taken. This aids in keeping to a minimum the psychological reactions all patients show. It has been noted that blood pressures jump when the doctor reenters the room."

Potato flour, made cheaply by a new process, can help feed Europe's hungry peoples, says Dr. Roderick K. Eskew of the Agriculture Department's eastern regional research laboratory at Philadelphia.

The flour can be made at a cost of less than 2 cents a pound, not including the cost of the potatoes. The process was developed in response to a request of the Commodity Credit Corp. for 200,000 tons of potato flour for export, Dr. Eskew told an American Chemical Society meeting. This country's normal output is only about 20,000 tons.

Livestock feed from potatoes could be made for slightly more than a cent a pound, if bleaching and sorting steps were omitted, he added. The flour contains 98 per cent of the whole potato, and offers a way of using surplus potatoes. The flour keeps well, and is easy to store and ship.

Air Power Planned For Italian Barges

ROME (AP).—Barges with airplane propellers may soon navigate Italy's northern inland waterways.

In this way it is proposed to make use of the old Venetian canals whose walls, built centuries ago, could not resist the wash from conventional underwater screws.

The idea of using air propulsion was presented to the recent inland waterways conference in Padua by Prof. Luigi Sante Darios, who had made a long study of the problem of adapting the ancient waterways to modern navigation needs.

Mountainous Italy has a fair network of canals and navigable waterways, totalling about 1250 miles.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Brass and Braid Find New Links

By Drew Pearson

A HOWL went up from some quarters of Congress when Defense Secretary Johnson sent the Joint Chiefs of Staff to White Sulphur Springs to mix play with work. Some of the brass hats thought the idea was foolish. However, the trip did more to bring about harmony at the Pentagon than anything since unification.

For the first time, the Chiefs of Staff got to the human side of the other fellow. Though they worked only two hours a day, they accomplished more paper work with less bickering than all day in their Pentagon offices.

Most of the time was spent on the golf links, where Army Chief of Staff Omar Bradley shot the best game—a net 75. Air Force Chief of Staff Hoyt Vandenberg's best score was 84, whereas Chief of Naval Operations Lous Denfeld didn't even play. He just tagged along to kibitz.

The generals and admirals also split up in sharing rooms. Vandenberg stayed with the Army's Maj. Gen A. M. Gruenther, secretary to the Joint Chiefs. Bradley bunked with Rear Admiral A. D. Struble, Denfeld's assistant, and Denfeld shared quarters with Lieut. Gen. Lauris Norstad, Vandenberg's assistant.

After playing and living together, they are now working more like a team.

Extra Fare To Vienna

PAUL HOFFMAN'S Marshall Plan-ECA has been going in for the usual hush-hush regarding any information reflecting scandal or inefficiency. It can be revealed, however, that when a batch of old Brooklyn streetcars was shipped to Austria recently to revitalize Vienna's transportation system, the taxpayers got socked an extra $73,000. The overcharge is on the books of the All-Transport Co., of New York City.

The company was hired by Austria to transport ECA goods purchased in this country—including the Brooklyn streetcars. ECA auditors made a spot check, discovered that the profits ran unusually high and started a thorough investigation.

They found that All-Transport shared its business with Overseas Terminal Corp., which turned out to be nothing but a dummy company. Thus, Overseas Terminal would charge its parent company for services, which amounted to All-Transport billing itself. The result was to boost profits.

All-Transport also chartered the Norwegian ship, Millbank, to haul goods to Austria. But instead of charging bulk rates, the company collected berth rates the same as if the goods had been sent over by regular freight. The company also neglected to give Austria credit for some non-ECA goods carried on the same ship.

These tactics ran up the profits of the All-Transport Co.—and the bill of the American taxpayers. Since the cash was put up by Uncle Sam, ECA is now negotiating with Austria to collect the excess profit. Austria, in turn, will have to recover from the All-Transport Co.

Distiller's Fair Deal

ONLY a few White House insiders know it, but the idea for President Truman's 300 billion dollar national income plea which he sent to Congress recently, originated with a conservative New York businessman, not a supposedly starry-eyed Fair Dealer.

Prompting Truman's plea for national income expansion was gruff, tough Lewis S. Rosenstiel, chairman of the board of Schenley Industries. Trotting around Washington, Rosenstiel had pointed out to Cabinet members that America has never tried to win the peace as hard as it has tried to win wars. He pointed out that "the world is not overproduced, but underconsumed and underinvested."

Rosenstiel also told Truman advisers that the Nation needs more pay for labor—a most unorthodox doctrine to come from big business. In fact, Rosenstiel went on record for a 5 per cent annual increase in wages for labor for the next five years to expand purchasing power where it is needed most, among the lower-bracket consumers. In turn, Rosenstiel wants labor to step up its efficiency 4 per cent every year.

Rosenstiel evolved much of his plan after a recent trip through Europe which convinced him that halfway measures would not win the peace against a dynamic foe like the Russians. Talking to Labor Secretary Maurice Tobin the other day, the Schenley chairman said:

"We spent 300 billion dollars plus untold misery, lives and suffering to win the war. We ought to be willing to pay a third as much to win the peace. We can't have peace until the peoples of the world can see themselves moving toward a higher standard of living. We've got to raise that standard here and abroad."

Tobin was so enthusiastic about the Rosenstiel "Win the Peace Plan," he wanted to trot his guest right over to see President Truman.

Note—At the Treasury Department, Rosenstiel urged Secretary Snyder to take a fresh look at the tax laws, start figuring out incentives for making business expand, not contract. Rosenstiel urged Snyder to take the initiative in reviewing tax incentives for business expansion rather than have Congress do it for him.

Surplus Women Want Husbands

GOVERNMENT agencies are usually bored with burdensome mail. But the other day the Interior Department received the following inquiry from Mrs. Krsta Tchossitch of Whittier, Calif., which it has not yet been able to answer:

"Department of Interior,
Washington, D. C.

"We are a group of lonely widows living here in Whittier with no hope of meeting men of our ages and marrying again—ages 30-60. I, as our spokesman, am writing to this department in the hope that I might be able to obtain the answers to the following questions: Where in the United States is there an abundance of men? Do you get letters from men working on Government projects in far off places saying that they are also lonely? If so, where are these places? The few men here in California that we have met are so spoiled that they do not value love and the devotion and a good home that a good wife can give them.

"I am inclosing a self-addressed letter for some kind of a reply. If you know of any other office where I might obtain this information please inform me.

Sincerely,
MRS. KRSTA TCHOSSITCH

On the Consumer's Shoulders

Minority Report Hits Gas Bill

By Robert S. Allen

FIRE and brimstone will be heaped on the natural gas "ripper" bill in a minority report of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

This is the measure that would strip the Federal Power Commission of regulatory control over a major segment of the natural gas industry and open the door for a 75-million-dollar boost in consumer rates.

The bill was put through the committee largely by the high-pressure efforts of Senator Robert Kerr, Oklahoma oil millionaire and presidential aspirant. He admits he would benefit considerably by it. Kerr is also strenuously opposing the reappointment of Power Commissioner Leland Olds, who has denounced the legislation.

The blistering minority report, to be released this week, will be signed by Senators Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), Warren Magnuson (D., Wash.), Francis Myers (D., Pa.), and Charles Tobey (R., N. H.).

Price Rise Held Aim

THE minority report will make two main charges against the bill. These are summed up in the following blasts:

"The admitted object of the supporters of the bill is higher prices . . . The cost of this legislation to some 40 million people who use natural gas may ultimately be reckoned in the hundreds of millions of dollars."

"The bill is a wholly unrealistic and inadequate way of protecting the consumers of a utility service against the threat of monopoly. It represents nothing more than a futile gesture calculated to deceive the public."

Last week the House Interstate Commerce Committee reported out a practically similar bill by Representative Oren Harris (D., Ark.). He and Kerr have worked closely on the legislation.

Opponents claim they have assurances President Truman will veto the bill if it ever gets to him.

Inspection Trips

A SENATE Appropriations Subcommittee will go to Europe in September for a first-hand check on how Marshall Plan money is being expended. The group will visit Britain, Belgium, the Scandinavian countries, Germany, Greece, Italy and Spain. The last is not included, as yet, in ECA, but plans include going there.

Another committee group will go to the Far East in October. Senator Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) will head the European tour; Senator Guy Gordon (R., Oreg.), the Far Eastern junket.

Thomas has already laid down the law on how his group will conduct itself.

"Let's get this straight," he announced. "There will be no cocktail parties, no guided tours, and no social doings. We are going after information on public business, and we will stick to our business."

Benefits Remembered

A SENATE investigator encountered Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan in a hotel lobby and exchanged pleasantries. The White House military aide was cordial but obviously uncertain whom he was talking to.

"I had dinner with you and President Truman on an occasion in this hotel a year ago," the investigator explained.

"I recall the dinner, all right," Vaughan grinned, "and I remember I didn't pay for it."

'Penny' Card May Be 2 Cents

A 100-MILLION-DOLLAR increase in postal rates will be recommended by the Senate Post Office Committee this week. Penny postcards will be raised to 2 cents and rates boosted on magazines, daily newspapers of over 10,000 circulation, mail order catalogues and parcel post. Books will not be affected.

Red Moves in Pacific

AMBASSADOR MYRON COWEN is warning Washington authorities that a paralyzing general strike is being fomented in the Philippine Islands. He says Communist penetration of Manila has become critical and immediate measures are necessary to aid the government of President Quirino. Cowen also declares that other Communist strikes are being organized in Kobe, Japan, Korea, Indo-China and Hongkong. The intent is to undermine United States control of the Pacific.

Cowen urgently advises that General MacArthur be given the authority and means to aid the Filipino government and to cope with any other Communist strikes in the Pacific.

Admiral Eisenhower

MEETING new Navy Secretary Francis Matthews, General Eisenhower grinningly explain he was in a position to cooperate without any inhibitions. "You see," Eisenhower said, "I am an Admiral in the Nebraska Navy. That makes it possible for me to serve under you without any restraint. There may be some doubts about my seaworthiness, but there can be none about my devotion to the Navy."

Looking at the South

Here Was Even-Handed Justice

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss. — This story lies behind an unimportant decision of the Mississippi Supreme Court, and it is not important itself except that it concerns one of a good many related incidents that do happen in the South and that are largely disregarded or denied elsewhere.

Back in April, 1948, two cows were stolen from an elderly Negro couple who lived on a plantation in Clark County, Mississippi. The only thing special about this was that they were the only cows the old Negroes had.

They reported the theft to the sheriff of Clark County; and by the time he and his deputies finished their investigation they had built up a strong case, based on circumstantial evidence, against two white men. These white men were born in Clark County, had lived there all their lives, and were related to scores of people in the neighborhood.

BUT THE sheriff figured they were guilty of stealing cows, so he arrested them. They were held under bond for the September session of the grand jury. And when the grand jury met, it indicted the two white men.

The trial was held almost immediately. The two men were defended by a local lawyer. After the evidence was submitted, the prosecuting attorney told the jury in his address that the North frequently had harsh things to say about Southern justice. He urged the jury to prove that Clark County could and would deal fairly with all its citizens, regardless of color.

So the jury retired and in just 20 minutes returned with a verdict. The verdict was guilty, and it was met with considerable applause from spectators in the courtroom. The presiding judge then sentenced the two cow stealers. He gave them five years each, which is the extreme penalty in Mississippi for such an offense.

The convicted men appealed. A short time ago the Mississippi Supreme Court upheld their conviction, and they are now serving their five-year sentences. They are probably very puzzled men who can't understand why there should have been so much commotion over the theft of a couple of cows from some old Negroes.

They Still Can Carp

THE LEGAL part of the story stops there. The same people who deny that such indictments happen in the South can now step forward and ask what's so wonderful about it. They can point out that this is just what the South should have been doing all along. They are very good at the damned-if-you-do-and-damned-if-you-don't technique, and I wouldn't dare try to argue with them.

But there's just a little bit more to the story. As soon as the trial was over, the sheriff passed the hat, so to speak, and collected a fund for the old Negro couple.

The sheriff bought a mule for the husband with part of it, because he wanted a mule more than two new cows. The rest of the money was given to the old Negro woman.

The defense rests.

The Gallup Poll

Job Loss Held Nation's No. 1 Fear

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

UNEMPLOYMENT and the fear of it have become the No. 1 problem worrying the people in five sections of the country questioned in a Nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

The unemployment worry has jumped into first place in those areas just in the last few months. In March, people in most sections ranked the high cost of living and the housing shortage ahead of unemployment as the top problems facing their section.

The situation today is shown in the following survey results:

"What do you think is the most important problem facing this section of the country today?

The West Central farm States show the least concern over joblessness, ranking it third in importance in their section. In the Southern States, the civil rights question is given top ranking by the voters interviewed.

Following is the vote by individual sections:

NEW ENGLAND
(Me., N. H., Vt., Mass., R. I., Conn.)

1. Unemployment	46%
2. High cost of living	17
3. Housing	10
4. Labor-management problems	3
Others	17

MIDDLE ATLANTIC STATES
(N. Y., N. J., Pa., Del., Md., W. Va.)

1. Unemployment	27%
2. Housing	16
3. High cost of living	15
4. Labor-management problems	9
Others	31
Don't know	10

EAST CENTRAL
(Ohio, Ind., Ill., Mich.)

1. Unemployment	27%
2. High cost of living	17
3. Housing	11
4. Labor-management problems	10
Others	28
Don't know	14

WEST CENTRAL
(Iowa, Wis., N. D., S. D., Min., Kan., Neb., Mo.)

1. High cost of living	16%
2. Farm problems (prices, labor, storage, production, etc.)	15
3. Unemployment	13
4. Housing	10
Others	33
Don't know	18

SOUTH
(Va., Ga., N. C., Fla., Ky., La., Miss., Tenn., Ark., Okla., Ala., Tex.)

1. Civil rights	29%
2. Unemployment	15
3. High cost of living	11
4. Labor-management problems	9
Others	25
Don't know	17

ROCKY MOUNTAIN
(Mont., Wyo., Utah, Idaho, Nev., N. M., Ariz., Colo.)

1. Unemployment	23%
2. Farm problems	15
3. Conservation and irrigation	13
4. Labor-management problems	10
Others	26
Don't know	18

PACIFIC COAST
(Calif., Ore., Wash.)

1. Unemployment	31%
2. Housing	13
3. High cost of living	10
4. Conservation and irrigation	13
Others	36
Don't know	9

Each table adds to more than 100 per cent because some voters named more than one problem.

The survey results correspond roughly with the actual unemployment situation as judged by the percentage of persons covered by unemployment insurance who are collecting benefits. As of the week of May 1, according to data supplied by the Social Security Administration, the proportion of people collecting benefits was greatest in the New England section, high on the Pacific Coast, especially in California, and lowest in the West Central farm section.

MIAMI.—Here's a man who has spent three and a half years of his life up in the air—and still loves it.

Basil L. Rowe, 53-year-old No. 1 pilot for Pan American World Airways, has set all kinds of records since he first climbed into a cockpit back in Prattsville, N. Y., in 1914.

This August the dean of scheduled airline stick-pushers celebrates 35 years of flying, 21 of them with Pan American, more convinced than ever that "there's nothing finer" than aviation for fun or making a living.

Rowe estimates he has spent some 30,000 hours in the air—25,000 of them officially recorded in his logbook—and flown more than 3½ million miles, enough to take him around the world about 140 times.

His proudest achievement of all is a perfect safety record for the three and a half decades.

Rowe was born at Shandaken, N. Y., Feb. 10, 1896, and attended high school there. Planes were newfangled contraptions in those days. When he was 18 he went over to the annual Prattsville county fair to watch "spectacular exploits by an intrepid acrobat" named Turk Adams.

It's "thumbs up" for Basil Rowe, Pan American's No. 1 pilot, as he prepares for another trip from the Miami International Airport

The Aerial Samaritan

DURING one stunt Adams overshot the tiny field and landed in a heap in front of the crowd. Skeptical spectators went home, but Rowe pitched in and helped Adams patch up the weary old biplane. In return the grateful pilot agreed to teach Rowe to fly.

Since then all his working days have been spent in a cockpit.

Rowe teamed with Adams for a time and they barnstormed up and down the East Coast. In those days, he recalls, there were only two airports in New York State and less than a dozen in the entire country. Cow pastures and vacant lots served as landing fields.

He was a flying instructor during World War I and then continued barnstorming through the United States, the West Indies, Mexico and Central America. He was also busy entering air meets and accumulating prizes.

Took Top Post

IN 1926 Rowe helped organize the West Indies Aerial Express, with headquarters in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Two years later the company merged with Pan American. Because of his previous flying experience, Rowe was given top position on Pan American's seniority list when he joined the airline in August 1928.

As PAA'S ranking pilot, Rowe helped open the airline's routes. He teamed with Charles A. Lindbergh to survey routes through Central America, across the north coast and down the east coast of South America to Argentina.

When World War II came along PAA organized the special Africa-Orient division to operate under air transport command in supplying allied armies in the Far East.

Rowe was the first Africa-Orient division pilot to land in Africa. Twice while making the "cannonball run," as it became known, he was shot at by Nazi subs in the South Atlantic.

He also was one of the first Africa-Orient pilots to "mother" a flock of fighter planes across on a follow-the-leader principle. At one time Rowe crossed the Atlantic six times in five days. After the war he returned to Miami and the comparative tranquility of the Latin American runs. He pilots four-engined clippers to Central America, Panama, the West Indies, Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires.

Rowe figures he spends 85 to 100 hours a month flying now. His wife died in 1942 and he hasn't any children. So in his leisure time he sails, fishes, swims, plays golf—and makes an occasional hop in a light plane—just for fun.

Appeal of Prohibition Lacking in India, Too

By Steven V. David

NEW DELHI, India, (AP).—Prohibition is creeping over India, along with bootlegging, home brew and speakeasies. Any decline in drinking has been limited to good liquor.

The situation is not orderly. Bootleggers and police stage dramatic battles. Illegal factories turn out ill-advised beverages. Some toddy tappers, who used to tap palms for country liquor, have joined the unemployed. The rest continue to tap when no one is looking.

Provinces committed to prohibition have seen liquor tax revenues dry up faster than their citizens. To top that, more money has had to be spent for special prohibition guards and expanded police departments. The result has been new taxes on everyday necessities.

Gandhi Precepts Spur

COMPLETE prohibition is still some years away, but as long as the Congress Party remains in power the movement will spread. To spur it on, the party has the preachings of Mahatma Gandhi, who believed the lot of the impoverished millions would improve if no money were spent on drink. The Brahmins, teachers of the Hindu religion, are not supposed to touch anything alcoholic.

Nearly every province had placed restrictions on drinking when the central government began last fall to urge a "go-slow" policy. It feared the provinces would turn to it for financial assistance to make up for the loss of liquor revenue.

But prohibition had become a political issue in some provinces, and in Madras, there was a feeling that liquor tax money was tainted money. That province, and several others, went ahead.

Madras, the only province so far completely dry, figures it will lose 164 million rupees annually (about 49 million dollars) in liquor taxes.

Bombay province, scheduled to be totally dry by next April, will have to give up liquor revenues which once came to 120 million rupees. In the United Provinces, where prohibition is now limited to 11 of 26 districts, complete prohibition will mean the loss of 62 million rupees. Bihar province, which is raising country liquor prices and reducing the number of shops, will have to do without 40 million rupees revenue when totally dry.

Jolt for "Nira"

PROHIBITION in Bombay, dry five days weekly, has been marked by a controversy over a soft drink called "Nira." The Bombay government introduced it in an effort to wean addicts away from stronger stuff and to provide jobs for toddy tappers. Nira—unfermented palm juice—appeared to be catching on until 20 persons who drank it at a shop in Poona developed cholera, eight dying.

Will prohibition succeed? To do so, it must have the support of the great majority and experience so far indicates this is lacking.

The Magazine Rack

"ORGANIZED religion in America today is headed toward self-destruction." With these words, Agnes E. Meyer starts her article in Look, "Why Protestants Need to Wake Up."

More and more people are turning to religion, but instead of meeting this challenge, church groups are engaged in internecine strife, "making themselves and religion ridiculous," she charges.

Ever since the Reformation, there have been many such religious revivals, Mrs. Meyer points out. "When normal social conditions were reestablished, they have always been succeeded by sharp recessions, but each such revival touched a lower peak than its predecessor and each period of reaction a lower depth. Thus religion as we now know it is, perhaps, being weighed in the scales of humanity for the last time."

It is not amalgamation she is recommending, Mrs. Meyer stresses. That is neither possible nor desirable. "What we need in the religious world is not unification, but unity. We need the ability to work harmoniously with all other forms of religious worship and to look upon them with understanding, sympathy and respect." She then goes on to outline specifically what this would entail.

Other Look features include the cover story on a Ginger Rogers fishing expedition and "The Other Woman is Often the Creation of the Wife," by Jacques Bacal, lawyer and family relations expert.

SYDNEY W. MORRELL, who writes on Canada for Holiday, has what seems to be a perfect background for the assignment. He is a British-born author, married to a Canadian, and was evacuated there after the war to recover from a bacillic infection. He succeeds in giving to Americans, who probably know more about any country you can name than they do about their neighbor, both a brief history and a general view of Canada's many and varied regions. Nowhere, however, is there so much as a whiff of the travelogue.

Only recently, says Morrell, has the consciousness "of a separate Canadian character begun to dawn on the people of Canada." As long as they can remember, Canadians have been so busy trying to prove to America that they are not blind followers of Britain, and to Britain that they are not "Americans," that they have had no occasion to think out what it means to be a "Canadian."

Canadian citizenship, for instance, as distinct from British, was not established until the beginning of 1947. There are two and really three national anthems, no national songs, no national heroes, no real flag of its own. The fathers of Canadian federation were politicians who were more at home in the intricacies of committee procedure than in the sentiments of the people they brought together only 82 years ago.

ONE of the best of the naturally numerous polio stories is Nanette Kutner's "If Your Child Gets Polio," in Liberty. Miss Kutner interviewed widely separated families whose children have suffered from the disease, with the purpose of finding out how much they could depend on the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis for funds and help, how to go about obtaining such assistance and what mistakes to avoid.

First of all, she found, application must be made to your own county chapter. There are 2809 such entities and, to put it bluntly, your chances for help "depend on where you're located." Everything will depend on how much money your local chapter has and even more on how it's managed, according to Miss Kutner. See for yourself whether or not it is competently run. Ask about its finances, she warns. If they are low, go to work before it is too late.

RECOMMENDED in a good issue of Reader's Digest are Michael Padev's "Last Moments of a Free Man" and Gene Tunney's "My Fights with Jack Dempsey." Both are excerpts from books; the former, from "Dimitrov Wastes No Bullets," describes Nicholas Petkov's last speech in Parliament after the Communists announced that he, the Bulgarian opposition leader, was under arrest and would never be allowed to leave the building except to enter prison.

The parts taken from Tunney's forthcoming book, "The Aspirin Age, 1919-1941," cover his estimate of how Dempsey might be beaten and the subsequent two Dempsey-Tunney fights.

"Jack Dempsey was a great fighter," says Tunney. "I wish we could have met when we were both at our unquestionable best. We could have decided many matters, to me the most important of which is whether a good boxer can always lick a good fighter. I still say yes."

"ALL GIRLS are divided into two parts," opines Marjorie Marks in Good Housekeeping: Those who marry as soon as or before school is over and those who don't. For those who don't, the big question is what to do with the "stopgap years." These years can and should be the most educational in a girl's life. All too many parents want to maintain a dogged hold on her, asserts the author.

Independence is what she needs, says Mrs. Marks, who herself was kept on a tight string, but who has allowed her own daughter the freedom she preaches. There is no teacher like experience, and if she wants it she should have this chance to grow up.

Nancy Maitland writes for the benefit of the girl who has broken her engagement, with some asides to her parents and friends.

Mr. Davis Insists on His Cut

CLYDE BRION DAVIS, author of the new novel "Playtime Is Over" (Lippincott), has a standard reply which he sends to anthologists who wish him to furnish free and amusing anecdotes:

"My Dear Mr. X:

"My favorite anecdote in this case concerns Anatole France.

"On receipt of a request from an anthologist that he donate an anecdote to a forthcoming book, M. France replied to this effect:

"'My Dear Sir:'

"'In answer to your interesting communication I have the following suggestion:

"'Inform each of the butchers in Paris that you plan to open a butcher shop and that you are inviting him to donate one of his favorite cuts to your enterprise.

"'When the butchers of Paris have contributed an ample supply of their stock in trade, please inform me and I will make a contribution to you from my own stock in trade.'"

A Centenary Casts Up a Portrait

Did Poe's Likeness Haunt Him?

The center sketch, found among the papers of John Hill Hewitt, puzzles scholars. Some believe Hewitt became so immersed in Poe lore that in his sketch he gave himself some of Poe's physical characteristics. Judge for yourself: Poe is on the left, Hewitt on the right

By Bem Price
Associated Press Staff Writer

ATLANTA.—Only a Poe scholar would argue over a Poe portrait—if that's what it is.

For the layman interested in Edgar Allan Poe, there are too many good likenesses of the great American poet and short story writer around to be bothered.

But for the scholar, and since this is the centennial of Poe's death, the identity of a sketch turned up in the papers of Robert Hill Hewitt is a good question with which to pass a dull evening. The subject arises from the fact that Hewitt was an acquaintance of Poe's, even though their personal relationships were somewhat strained.

It was 100 years ago, October 7, that the author of "The Raven" came to a sorry end in Baltimore, Md.

Gradually it began to dawn on the world that one of the great and original minds of the nineteenth century had passed.

Up to this point, Hewitt had been nothing more than a literary hack of local fame.

Satirized Lincoln

HE WAS a dramatist, music teacher, poet and critic. Scholars remember Hewitt as an individual chiefly because he wrote "The Minstrel's Return'd from the Wars" and a satire in bad taste on "Mr. Linkum" (Lincoln).

The present-day public will be acquainted with Hewitt mostly because his 'Minstrel's Return'd" was a mystery tune on a recent radio quiz show.

In any case, scholars are indebted to Hewitt because he knew Poe.

Indeed, after the Civil War, all of Hewitt's personal works were subordinated to his reminiscense of Poe.

This subordination has produced a curious speculation. Did Hewitt in later years so immerse himself in Poe recollections that he gave to himself some of Poe's physical attributes?

Here the sketch is presented in evidence.

In a scholarly little book, published in a limited edition by Emory University, Richard Barksdale Harwell writes:

"There is a strong temptation to believe that the drawing is a sketch of Poe . . . Careful consideration, however, leads to the conclusion that the sketch is more likely Hewitt's impression of how he himself looked as a young man.

More Like Poe

"IF SUCH is the case, it is strange that so much of the likeness of Poe has crept into the drawing, for the sketch more resembles certain Poe photographs than it does any likeness of Hewitt."

A native New Yorker who came South with his father to Augusta, Ga., Hewitt started out as a music teacher. Eventually he branched out and migrated to Baltimore, where he in time became publisher of the Baltimore Minerva.

It was Hewitt's sad fate to give short shrift to one of Poe's early works, "Al Aaraf." Subsequently, in a literary contest for the best short story and the best poem, Poe and Hewitt were rivals. Poe won the short-story contest with "Manuscript Found in a Bottle," while Hewitt got the poetry award.

Poe was angry because he felt he should have won both prizes and that Hewitt's name and influence prevented him from doing so.

In any case the bitterness between Poe and Hewitt once reached the point where Hewitt struck the younger man. The gist of the argument: Poe accused Hewitt of tampering with the contest selection committee and said bluntly he didn't think Hewitt was a gentleman.

Paths Diverge

NOT long thereafter the paths of the two men parted save for one brief encounter years later. Poe's led to a drunkard's grave, Hewitt's to obscurity.

As the men who knew Poe faded into death, Hewitt became more and more identified as "the man who knew Poe."

While Hewitt considered Poe a man without principle, he did profess to admire some of the poet's later works.

Hewitt and Poe last met in this city, just before the poet's death.

Poe, Hewitt wrote, was "seedy in appearance and woe-begone. He came boldly up to me, and, offering his hand, which I willingly took, asked me to forget the past. He said he had not had a mouthful of food since the day previous and asked me to lend him 50 cents to obtain a meal.

"Though he looked the used-up man all over," Hewitt continued, "still he showed the gentleman. I gave him the money—and I never saw him afterward."

Garden and Bees Helped Wadleigh Over Tough Spot

had warned her when he proposed that "I'd once been hooked up with the Commies."

"I warned her that if what I'd done ever came out in the open it would be awkward, using the British sense of the word."

She married him after he assured her that his motivation had not been selfish and that he would "never do anything like it again."

Wife Sold Books

WHEN their savings were low after he lost his job, Mrs. Wadleigh, a former school teacher, got a full time job. He stayed home with the kids, aged 7, 5 and 3.

Now they have some money from the newspaper stories. It will tide them over for a while.

At present Mrs. Wadleigh and the children are in New York visiting her mother, who fell and injured her hip about a week ago.

("Accidents don't just happen," says the son-in-law. "No doubt it was linked to all this trouble.")

While his wife is away, Wadleigh is living on oatmeal three times a day. "It's just too damned much trouble to cook more than that for one mouth."

When not working in the garden or on the beehives, he's inside typing magazine story outlines or reading books about economic conditions. He switched his preoccupation with economic theory to practical economics about the time he became a Communist spy.

Wadleigh Has Luncheon Date With Jane B., Who Had Joined the Party

secrate their lives to a cause, just as an incapacity for disciplined action is a common weakness of independent thinkers like myself. But there were signs (so it seemed then) that the Communist movement was already beginning to outgrow the fundamentalist phase of its early development.

A friend made the connection for me with the Communists. I had met Jane B. socially during my first year in Washington. (Her real name is known to the FBI, but it did not come out in my testimony at the Hiss trial.) One day—it must have been in 1933 or 1934—I asked a mutual friend about her.

"Have you seen Jane lately? What's she doing with herself?"

"She's joined the Communist Party. Didn't you know that?"

"I'll be doggoned! No, I didn't know it. Interesting."

I called Jane and made a lunch appointment. As far as I can remember, this was motivated mainly by curiosity, though I may already have had in the back of my mind the thought that I might want to establish some contact with the Communists at some time.

I opened my luncheon meeting with Jane B. by saying: "—— tells me you've joined the Communist Party. That true?"

Her eyes flashed anger across the restaurant table.

"That's a dirty trick—that loose talk!"

"Why?"

"Julian, I could lose my job if that gets around!"

"I should have realized that. But you know, I've been accustomed all my life to saying freely what I think about politics and expecting other people to do the same."

With a smile I added: "You can count on me not to do any loose talking."

Then she spoke freely.

Still Admires Her

I NEVER had enough conversations with Jane to know much of her life history, but I believe she may have come to know the facts about poverty and social injustices as a result of an interest in social problems based on humanitarian feelings, and it must have been the shock of learning these facts that pushed her to the extreme left. She was an utterly sincere person. I greatly admired her character, and I still do.

When I decided to come out of my cocoon and work with the Communists, after the Nazi coup in Germany, naturally Jane was my contact. I made a luncheon appointment and told her of my decision.

That was some time in 1935, and probably in the latter half of the year. Jane told me she would get in touch with me later.

I waited for weeks. I became very impatient and began to wonder whether the Communists were going to accept my offer. Then, at long last, Jane called me and made a lunch appointment, but she still had nothing to tell me. She merely asked me very politely if I would mind supplying a sample of my work.

"You mean my work at the Department of Agriculture?" I said.

"Yes," Jane replied quietly.

I decided to lend her a copy of an analysis I had made of the balance of international payments of the United States. It was not a classified document, and was based entirely on published data. That they would ask me to supply classified material had not yet occurred to me.

I selected this particular document largely, I think, because it was one of the few pieces of work assigned to me that had given me a chance to do some real economic analysis, and I took considerable pride in my ability to do that kind of work.

Blow Against Fascism

AT THE next lunch date, Jane returned my document and asked me:

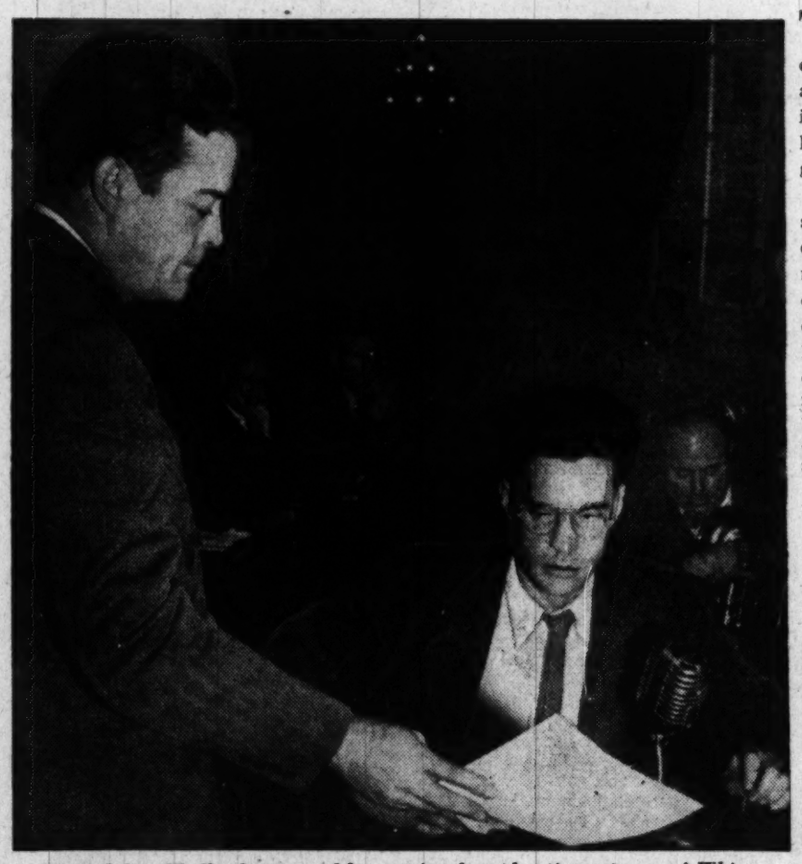
"Could you let us have material of that kind on other countries?"

I thought a moment. "Yes, I think I might. What countries would you be interested in?"

"Germany and Japan."

I can still picture the searching glance Jane gave me when she pronounced those words. She was studying my face closely.

There was a lot of meaning in those three words, "Germany and Japan." They meant that I was to supply information on the economic position of the two countries whose governments were threatening to destroy everything decent in the world. That information, obviously, would be sent to Russia for use as background in evaluating the war potential of the two aggressors.



When Julian Wadleigh appeared before the House Un-American Activities Committee last December, he refused to identify a picture of Whittaker Chambers shown him by Committee Investigator Louis J. Russell

I felt pleased and proud. There seemed really to be an opportunity for me to do something practical in checking the great menace of fascism in the world.

But one thing was not immediately clear to me. They wanted to use me not as an economic analyst, but as a channel for obtaining classified information. I did not then have access to classified information of any consequence and I did not need it in my work, but I did know how to analyze economic data.

But it soon became clear that what they wanted to use was not my ability as an economist, but my position in the Government. They wanted facts about foreign countries collected by the United States and perhaps not available or so readily available elsewhere. They wanted to use this Government as a window for spying on other countries.

THIS was a method of spying—spying at second hand—which had never occurred to me. But I was not by any means astonished. After all, spying was then and is a standard practice in international relations. Only the United States among the great powers then had no spy system.

Technically, I was giving out some of the secrets of my own Government to agents of a foreign country. However, I did not regard my action as contrary to the interests of the United States, but definitely the opposite. Anything that would help the Russians, or anyone else, to resist German or Japanese aggression would not only foster United States interests, but benefit the whole of mankind on the purely nationalistic level. The expansion of the aggressor powers was proceeding unchecked, and might soon become a direct military menace to this country.

I remember saying something along these lines to my wife, who was quite strenuously opposed to my intentions. She had better judgment.

Looking back over my life, I find that many of my most important decisions were made without careful consideration of all the consequences that might follow. In this case, I failed to explore carefully the possible result in later years of my freedom of action and my integrity.

When Jane returned the sample of my work, or about that time, I asked her what contacts I would have in my work with the party. She replied in a firm and rather parental manner: "You will have just one contact."

Not long afterward, I was introduced to my one contact. Jane arranged that we should meet for dinner at a restaurant. I came at the appointed time and found Jane with a man, to whom she introduced me, giving my name, but not his. I took this to mean that I was not permitted to know his name. We shook hands with some reserve, each studying the other carefully.

Fictional Type

THE appearance of my "contact" surprised me a little. I felt that if I were writing a piece of fiction and had to describe a Communist spy, I would have imagined something just exactly like what I saw before me.

The man was small, lean and wiry, with long dark hair. He was quite casually dressed. He could have been a character from the Latin Quarter of Paris in the 1920s except for his mouth and eyes.

His mouth was much too firm for a Bohemian; it suggested a character who could endure any amount of danger or hardship without flinching. His eyes, when at rest, glowed with a smoldering fanaticism, but they could also break out into a merry twinkle when he was amused. I was to learn that this man was indeed a fanatic, but that he also had a keen, rather sardonic sense of humor.

At that meeting I was given the most emphatic injunctions of secrecy. "You mustn't talk about this to any one—not even to your best friend, not even to your mother."

From that time on I was to see no more of Jane, since this man whose name I did not know was my only contact. Moreover, I was not allowed to know where my contact lived or his telephone number. If I needed to get in touch with him, I was to phone Jane and she would have him call me as soon as possible. I was to find out later that my mysterious contact, who would appear from nowhere and then vanish again, could be produced on quite short notice by Jane.

When we parted after dinner, I asked my contact: "Can you give me a name I can know you by?"

He thought a moment, then said with a grin: "Harold."

"How about a last name?"

Again reflection, then: "Wilson."

(Copyright, 1949, New York Post Corp.)

NEXT SUNDAY: "Harold" gets a break when Wadleigh is transferred to the State Department, a "key place." Wadleigh describes the detection-proof method worked out for extracting papers "of interest to the espionage apparatus." Then Harold is ordered to introduce Wadleigh to another "contact," Carl, later to be known as Whittaker Chambers. Harold gets jealous, and actually pouts at a dinner for three in a Philadelphia restaurant. But Wadleigh sees more and more of Chambers, and gets deeper and deeper into duplicity, as the narrative develops.

From Babylonia to World War II

We've Been on Map 5000 Years

THE STORY OF MAPS. By Lloyd A. Brown. Little, Brown. 397 pp. Ill. $7.50.

"THE WORLD has been mapped, after a fashion, and this story tells how the job was done, stressing methods and apparatus rather than the end product," Lloyd A. Brown writes in the introduction to "The Story of Maps."

Brown, thereafter, traces the development of the techniques used in map-making as well as the increase of geographic knowledge in this survey of 5000 years of cartography. In some respects, it is a study of the evolution of learning itself, hampered by ignorance, superstition or just plain lack of curiosity and initiative.

The earliest positive evidence of map-making stems from Babylonia, where a real estate survey for the purpose of taxing property was functioning around 2300 B.C., Brown observes, and map-making made progress until the Dark Ages, when with other forms of learning it suffered a setback.

Medieval Road Maps

ONE OF THE results of the Medieval preoccupation with religion, however, was the making of travel guides and road maps for pilgrims to the Holy Land. With the development of the Renaissance and the land boom touched off by Columbus' discovery of the New World, map-making assumed a new importance.

So commercially valuable were charts and maps of the new sea routes and lands that governments and trading companies tried to keep new information secret and navigators began the practice of weighting their papers with lead and throwing them overboard to keep them out of the hands of an enemy.

Despite their zeal for exact information, mapmakers were prone to using legend and speculation. As an example, Brown cites the story of St. Brendan, an Irish monk, who presumably made a long voyage in the Atlantic in search of an island that was Paradise. For nearly 1200 years—as late as 1759—the mythical island was located on maps.

One of the most interesting of Brown's chapters is devoted to "The Map and Chart Trade." Mercator, Ortelius and Blaeu are among those who figure in the chapter, and Brown in his discussion of the highly decorative maps of the latter sixteenth and the seventeenth centuries has an interesting digression on methods of coloring them.

Detail Requires Bulk

ONE OF THE problems that bothered mapmakers of those times, and still does, is the question of size. The larger the map the more it shows, but the more unwieldy it is, too. Apparently there is no perfect solution to this problem.

In succeeding chapters, Brown brings his story up to the present, discussing the project for the universal International Map and the lack of exact geographical information revealed by two world wars. He recommends that all Government mapmaking agencies be combined into one and placed under the Department of National Defense.

Brown, librarian of the Peabody Institute Library in Baltimore and former curator of maps at the William L. Clements Library, University of Michigan, has written a book that will probably remain a standard work for many years to come. It is illustrated with 41 pages of maps and diagrams and drawings in the text, and has an extensive bibliography.—LEE GROVE.

Unbearably Convincing

Terrifying Portrayal Of 1 Day in the Line

DAY WITHOUT END. By Van Van Praag. Sloane. 261 pp. $3.

ANY realistic portrayal of the bloodshed and brutality of war has a secondary (and perhaps unintentional) function as powerful anti-war propaganda.

VAN PRAAG

Such novels after World War I did not save us from World War II. But at least they dispelled much of the romantic nonsense about mass murder.

Unfortunately, police states such as Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia carefully suppress the disillusioned and bitter testimonials of their shocked, broken and blood-splattered young men. Thus the aggressive nations most in need of mellowing are deprived of such books as "The Naked and the Dead" and "Day Without End," while the relatively peaceful democracies are made yet more peaceful by their publication.

If every young man on both sides of the Iron Curtain could read Van Van Praag's terrifying novel, there would be far less likelihood of World War III.

Nowhere in current literature can you find packed into 261 pages more sheer horror, mental and physical suffering, unendurable weariness and organized disruption of human decency than in this realistic story on one day's action by one American platoon in the hedgerow warfare before St. Lo.

Within the Greek unities of time, place and action, Praag, who was himself a combat soldier, follows the fortunes of Paul Roth and his platoon who have been 58 days in the line when the story begins, and 59 when it closes.

Dirty, ragged, unshaven, terrified, the men crawl out of their foxholes for yet another day of dangerous patrols, and then a major attack upon the German positions. Some die, some are horribly mutilated, some crack up mentally as the "day without end" drags to its inglorious conclusion.

Praag uses several increasingly familiar episodes to increase the bitterness of his soldiers: artillery firing on their own positions, air force men bombing their own troops, suicidal orders from officers safely back of the line. But Bill Mauldin is right when he calls the book "authentic, moving, dramatic and powerful." It is all of that plus being almost unbearably convincing. We have little to be proud of in this wartorn century.—S. N.

Two-Bit Books Ask No Quarter

DO YOU know the name of a book which sold 385,000 copies in the last month? And of another which sold 310,000? And of a half dozen others which sold more than 100,000 apiece?

You will not find them on the usual best-seller lists, for they are quarter books. These particular titles are published by Bantam, which plans to issue monthly lists of its own eight two-bit best sellers.

Sold like other pocket-sized books on this country's 77,000 newsstands, where you buy your newspaper, and not just in the 3500 bookstores, the first list contains the following:

"The Stranger," by Lillian Bos Ross (385,000); "The Other Room," by Worth Tuttle Hedden (310,000); "My Sister, My Bride," by Merriam Modell; "My Flag Is Down," by James Marescà; "Stranger in Paris," by W. Somerset Maugham; "The Chinese Room," by Vivian Connell; "Nevada," by Zane Grey (180,000); and "Lady Godiva and Master Tom," by Raoul Faure (115,000).

Lanny Budd Rounds Out His Saga

By Sterling North

O SHEPHERD, SPEAK! By Upton Sinclair, Viking. 629 pp. $3.50.

WHAT would you do if you were willed $1,000,000 to be used in the cause of international peace? Start a syndicate? Publish a weekly called "Peace?" Buy radio time?

That's what Lanny Budd does in this concluding volume of the ambitious historical series recording every world shaking event of the last 33 years. But after visiting Stalin at Truman's request, he tells the President:

"Trust in God, but keep your powder dry."

UPTON SINCLAIR

Ardent socialist though he is, Upton Sinclair has not one remaining illusion about the Kremlin. He knows the Communists for the fanatics and bigots that they are. And not even the Reds can claim that he views the world with a "capitalistic bias."

With this 300,000-word novel, the tenth of the Lanny Budd series, Upton Sinclair has rounded out one of the greatest tours de force in the history of literature.

You may disagree with his politics. You may insist that the Superman heroics of Lanny Budd are incredible; that no man can pass through battle lines and Iron Curtains like a hot knife through butter; that it is quite impossible to simultaneously be the close "friend" of top Communists, Nazis, Fascists, underground Socialists, New Dealers, right-wing Republicans and spiritualists; that no one could ever have been the trusted confidant of both Hitler and Roosevelt; and, finally, that no living human being could know as much about art, atomic physics, politics, armaments, music and the social graces as Lanny Budd does.

But after every adverse comment has been made, you must still admit that Upton Sinclair has accomplished the virtually impossible. In something less than 3,000,000 words of highly readable fiction he has bracketed a third of a century and two world wars.

Measure of Shaw

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW was not bestowing undue praise when he said: "When people ask me what has happened in my long lifetime, I do not refer them to the newspaper files and to the authorities, but to Upton Sinclair's novels." And Sinclair has had similar praise from men like Einstein, H. G. Wells and Thomas Mann.

In the new and final instalment of the series, which covers Lanny's progress from the Battle of the Bulge to the summer of 1946, our omnipresent hero continues to be on the spot at all major events: Yalta, the death of Roosevelt, the explosion of the first atomic bomb, and the Kremlin when Truman needs him there most pressingly.

He also: saves millions of dollars of stolen art masterpieces from salt mines and elsewhere in Germany; rounds up German atomic scientists for the Allies, saves his half sister Marceline from a concentration camp; testifies against Goering at the war crimes trial, and finds time during the two years to become a famous radio commentator, and found an American Peace Foundation dedicated to the proposition that war is caused by:

1. Overpopulation, due principally to ignorance and bigotry on the subject of birth control. And—
2. The private ownership of capital and means of production.

What Upton Sinclair doesn't seem to realize is that socialism faces almost the same economic and political problems that capitalism does. That it can be in dire trouble during world economic crises. That it can be perverted to nationalism as in the cases of Russia, Germany and to a lesser extent England. That it does not insure democracy. And that it does by necessity tend to substitute force for economic incentive.

What he further fails to realize is that Social Democrats and theoretical Marxists are poor bulwarks against Communism because they share at least some of the same beliefs.

Perhaps only in a mixed economy can we hope to have both social progress and political freedom.

Clew in the Index

SINCLAIR himself, despite the best of intentions during his long and articulate lifetime, has shown, unfortunately, a subconscious admiration of power. For instance—

The present volume contains a complete index to all 10 volumes of the series. Measured in column inches in that index, various world figures are awarded the following comparative attention:

Eight inches—Adolph Hitler.
Five inches—F. D. R.
Four and one half inches—Hermann Wilhelm Goering.
Two inches—Sir Basil Zaharoff, Mussolini.
One and one half inches—Churchill, Hess.
One inch—Franco, Hearst; Goebbels.
Three quarters of an inch—Stalin.
Half an inch—Albert Einstein, Leon Blum, Beethoven.

I am convinced that Upton Sinclair, given great power, would use it in the cause of peace. He has proved it in this imposing series. But all power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely. Perhaps one step toward peace is never again to let any single man or any single movement have such power, as several have had in the recent past.

The Picture Is Complete

ROUNDUP: In some ways, this is Upton Sinclair's valedictory. At the age of 71, he has published plays and innumerable pamphlets and articles. Into this, the tenth and last of the great Lanny Budd series, he has packed what might be called his final message to a war-torn, war-weary world.

Turning out 1000 words a day and 1000 pages a year for a decade, he has managed to squeeze one third of a century of frantic history into a 12-inch shelf.

He will doubtless go on writing to his death, and may he live to be as old as George Bernard Shaw. But it is highly unlikely that he will be able to offer a clearer picture of what the consecrated socialist believes is the way to peace.

There has been no wavering in Sinclair's stand from "The Jungle" (1904), in which he did a muckraking job on the Chicago stockyards, through the Lanny Budd series, in which he has done a muckraking job on a far slimier subject—world politics.

Sinclair may be tragically wrong in his major premise, but at least he has been firm, predictable and utterly consistent for nearly half a century.

Such devotion to what he believes is truth deserves laurels he has often been denied by those of us who frequently disagree with his politics. On his tombstone there should be carved:

"Here Lies the Dust of a Dedicated Man."

A 'Must' Book On the SEC

UNDERSTANDING THE SECURITIES ACT AND THE SEC. By Edward T. McCormick. American Book Co. $7.50.

WASHINGTON has many renowned authors, but few best-sellers. Perhaps the best reason is that many of them are like Dr. "Ted" McCormick, top SEC executive, who, incidentally, may be better known to employes of his agency as a Redskins and Nats fan than as the corporation finance expert that he is.

McCormick, a resident of McLean Gardens and an original career man of SEC, has written a book on what he knows best—the Securities Act and the SEC. It seems destined to become THE authority in its field.

This is the opinion of numerous authoritative journals. The Illinois Law Review describes it as an "unbiased and scholarly public work" and an "invaluable guide." It is described by the Michigan Law Review as "surprisingly thorough in spite of its brevity" and "valuable to expert and novice alike."

The Investment Dealers Digest declares this Washington author's work to be "required reading for every lawyer and accountant practicing before the SEC," and the Banking Law Journal says that it "fills a gap" in its field. From the New York Journal of Commerce comes a comment that it is a "must" for the executive of any company planning new finance. The Chicago Tribune terms it "the most comprehensive treatise in this field."—JOHN G. NORRIS.

In a Nutshell

Jacket design for "Mr. Preen's Salon," Robert Tallant's new novel of New Orleans

MR. PREEN'S SALON. By Robert Tallant. Doubleday & Co. 271. $3.

IN THIS hilarious tale of New Orleans' French Quarter life, 53-year-old landlord Oliver Preen pursues peace and quiet while everyone else pursues matrimony, to the sound of tinkling bourbon glasses. The author has lined up the most amusing list of characters since "You Can't Take It With You." There's Lily Arnez, a sexy divorcee living in the apartment above Oliver, who views him as wonderful husband material and a premarital lover. Lanny and Bud, two perverts who quarrel with regularity. Bud and Rita, the latter a prostitute who accepts no calls on Saturday night because "that's Bud's night." It's all done up in fine writing style by the author of three previous books on New Orleans and its people. Just the thing for a sick friend or ocean traveler.

AN ARMY IN EXILE: THE STORY OF THE SECOND POLISH CORPS. By Lieut. Gen. W. Anders. Macmillan. $5.

A LITTLE military history and a lot of politics make up this controversial account by the militantly anti-Communist General Anders. Taken prisoner in 1939, he spent many months in NKVD hands until, when Germany attacked Russia, he was invited to lead an army of Polish prisoners. It didn't see action until 1944, but its subsequent achievements in Italy won Allied plaudits. Anders, however, talks more about the Katyn massacre, and the "Sin of Tehran," and the tragic Warsaw uprising. He complains that among those too confident of Russia's good faith were Willkie, Mikolajczyk and even Churchill. According to his blanket indictment, "in Soviet Russia nobody tells the truth." Anders, himself, is rather free in his estimates of Russian losses in the war. Add them up, and he wouldn't have anybody to condemn.

AMERICANS BETRAYED: POLITICS AND THE JAPANESE EVACUATION. By Morton Grodzins. University of Chicago. $5.

THE military decision to evacuate 110,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry from the Pacific Coast in 1942, says Professor Grodzins, "was predicated on a racist philosophy, nurtured by regional pressures and eventually justified by a falsehood." He spent three years on the coast and in Washington collecting this abundant material, and found no record of Japanese-American sabotage at Pearl Harbor, and none on the mainland up to the time of the evacuation. The "military necessity" arguments used in behalf of the evacuation were almost equally effective against Germans and Italians, he says, yet they were not ousted. The whole shabby business is a dark warning for the rest of us native-born, he says.

A TENT ON CORSICA. By Martin Quigley. Lippincott. $2.75.

TAILGUNNER Steve Thompson and his friends flew Marauders to Italian targets from a Corsican base. Once in a while it was a milk run, but too often his buddies didn't come back. One day Steve picked up a nasty face cut from ground fire, and had to put on a substitute next time out. That time, of course, his own plane didn't come back, and he was the lone survivor of all the men in his tent. He'd liked to have stayed on and won a peck of medals, but he had a wife at home, and a baby he'd never seen. He decided he didn't want to play any more. His C. O. gave him a three-day leave in Rome to think it over, and Quigley wraps up his earnest novel. It's a new approach to the life of a serviceman, and Quigley shows personal concern about his characters, but somehow he still isn't persuasive.

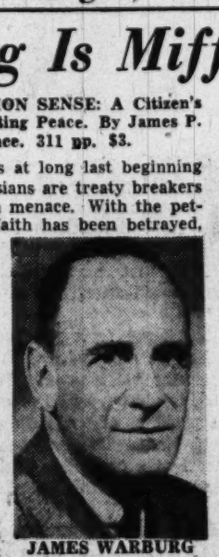
U. S. Sins Loom Larger, However

Warburg Is Miffed at Kremlin

LAST CALL FOR COMMON SENSE: A Citizen's Guide to Action for Lasting Peace. By James P. Warburg. Harcourt, Brace. 311 pp. $3.

JAMES P. WARBURG is at long last beginning to admit that the Russians are treaty breakers and that Communism is a menace. With the petulance of a man whose faith has been betrayed, he now admits that those who sit in the Kremlin are "masters of distortion and prevarication."



JAMES WARBURG

But his emphasis is still upon American sins of omission and commission, our "blundering" foreign policy, and our willful "ignorance" of the non-political, world-wide economic and technological revolutions which we cannot curb and might be wise to guide.

Our enemy isn't Russia, he avers. Our enemy is war itself, which next time will destroy civilization."

He still insists that America is almost as much to blame as Russia for the Iron Curtain, for the breakdown of four-power conferences, and for the dangerous two-power tension which no third power (there being none) can possibly hold in the traditional precarious balance.

Seemingly without humility concerning his previous misjudgments on Soviet intentions and his dangerously optimistic reports on Czechoslovakia's ability to withstand Communist pressure, Warburg continues to crusade for smaller expenditures on armaments.

He thinks our problems are not just those featured in the hysterical headlines. He thinks we are not trying to arrive at a modus vivendi with Russia because we think we could win any war against the Reds in the near future. But he warns that such a war would decimate western Europe and great areas in Asia, and leave us with the terrifying burden of trying to police and rehabilitate the entire planet.

The Greater Peril

THERE are elements of truth in almost all of his assertions. Knocking out Russia would not solve all of the world's problems. But what Warburg does not seem to realize is that the democracies are currently in the position of a man facing a giant cobra. Perhaps such a man is also slowly dying from several degenerative diseases. But unless he settles his argument with the cobra, his danger from other threatening evils is strictly academic.

Warburg bolsters the assumption that Russia does not want war, at least at this time; that Russia has too small an industrial potential to fight. He thinks that the Kremlin will also be unable to communize our allies if we increase our financial aid to Europe, practice democracy at home, and stop trying to force our ideas of private enterprise upon a world which will continue to veer toward some form of socialism no matter what we desire.

In part he may be right. But some elements of his argument are sheer and vapid nonsense. He is far too eager to return Germany to prosperity, much too severe in his condemnation of the frightened French. And when he compares prewar French pressure on Czechoslovakia to the stranglehold Russia now has on that nation, he is guilty of an utterly misleading parallel. His glib statement that most of the satellite nations never had democracy anyhow implies a viciously erroneous conclusion.

He seemingly contradicts himself several times on the danger of Communism in China, and subscribes to the fatal notion that the Chinese civil war is merely a peasant rebellion having little connection with the aims of Moscow.

In one part of the book he fears a treaty with western Germany because it would necessitate pulling out our troops, thus leaving the weak new German state to face a Russian deal or Russian conquest. In another chapter he makes the suggestion that all four great powers pull their armies out of Germany (which would certainly leave the field to Russia).

New Dealer's Renunciation

IT SEEMS curious, to say the least, to hear an erstwhile New Dealer admit that after Yalta and Tehran no decent peace treaty was possible, since at those conferences the Atlantic Charter was scuttled with our blessing in exchange for Russian military assistance against Japan (which we did not need).

But on one major point Mr. Warburg is persuasive.

Our shrinking planet has made "One World" an inevitability.

The three possible alternatives as he sees them are:

1. One World through American conquest.
2. One World through Russian conquest and Communist revolutions.
3. One World through peaceful federation.

Warburg believes that the currently ineffectual United Nations can be altered to become a world government. He is more specific than most world Federalists on the powers this Government should have and the forms of sovereignty the member states would have to delegate. But he does not tell us how we are to get along without Russia in such a federation, or how (alternatively) we can get her to join, or to cooperate if she does join.

Warburg's statement that we cannot hope for a universal Bill of Rights under such a government is a shocking and cowardly bit of appeasement of tyranny and would most certainly be disavowed by most world federalists.

True, we are betting more on war than on peace these days. True, fear begets fear, and arming begets arming. But how are we going to convince the Russians that they must behave like civilized and reasonable human beings unless we are fully prepared to defend ourselves? I fear that even the well meaning Mr. Warburg cannot answer that annual 15-billion-dollar question.—STERLING NORTH.

NEWS TO ME: "Watch your P's and Q's originated in those days (of the Conestoga wagoners). Tavern keepers made a record of charges against their customers by writing on a slate that was kept behind the tavern bar in full view of all.

"When a pint of whisky was purchased on credit, the letter P was written on the slate, and when a quart was purchased the letter Q was recorded. Some of the heavy drinkers would sometimes have too many P's and Q's entered back of their names, and the proprietor reminded them that their bills were getting too high by saying, 'Watch your P's and Q's.' Imperishable Muse

TO GET BACK to literary matters, the July number of Poetry magazine contains a poem not to be found in the collected works of Emily Dickinson. The magazine prefaces the poem with the following statement: "This poem was sent to us with the statement that it was dictated by Claire Burch under hypnosis. 'During the hypnotic state a voice declared that she was Emily Dickinson, answered questions, and after a silence of five minutes produced these stanzas.'—The Editors." The strange thing about it is that the poem sounds like Emily Dickinson.

FUTURES: Doubleday will publish Gen. Lucius Clay's personal story, entitled "Decision in Germany," early in 1950. When last heard from, the retired military governor was catfishing at Marietta, Ga.

Rear Admiral Ellis M. Zacharias, USN (retired), author of "Secret Mission," will have a new book on the stands come November. It is "Behind Closed Doors, the Secret History of the Cold War," to be published by Putnam.

Alan Barth, editorial writer for The Washington Post, and Walter Hamilton, a legal consultant here, are among the contributors to a symposium, "Years of the Modern." A discussion of the problems of contemporary American life, it will be released by Longmans, Green in October.

Culpeper County Is Celebrating 200th Anniversary This Week

Post Reporter

CULPEPER, Va.—Culpeper County will emerge from its quietly pleasant existence this week for an all-out celebration of its 200th birthday.

During the three-day public celebration starting Thursday, 75,000 visitors are expected to take part in or watch the coronation of a queen by Vice President Alben W. Barkley, a parade, pageant, two balls, a street dance and other side attractions.

Culpeper was officially born the same year as Alexandria and Dumfries, the great Colonial port towns on the Potomac. But while they burst suddenly into full flower, later to decline, Culpeper's story is the slow but steady development of a rich farming country.

Culpeper today is pretty much what it has always been—a community of farmers working the heart of the State's finest farm land.

Pressed On to West

THE COUNTY was settled by farmers, pressing westward to the Piedmont wtih the expansion of population and the depletion of Tidewater soil. A majority of its 14,000 population still live on farms, earning their living from dairying, beef cattle, sheep and hogs.

Two thirds of the county's 389 square miles are in crop land or pasturage. Last year, the dairymen sent $1,500,000 worth of milk to the Washington market.

Culpeper's only incorporated town is the county seat of the same name, a community of about 3000. It has assumed an importance out of proportion to its size, however, because as the geographical hub of northern Virginia, it is regional headquarters for several State agencies, businesses and utilities.

The county was formed by dividing Orange County. During its first century Culpeper was in turn sliced up to form the counties of Madison and Rappahannock. Both the younger counties are in Culpeper's trading area of 35,000 persons.

Negro High School Built

LAST YEAR these four counties were brought together again when they jointly built and started operating a regional Negro high school. This was their attempt to solve the problem of providing equal educational facilities for the Negro minority.

The local chamber of commerce says Culpeper is the second healthiest spot in the United States. Authority for the claim is believed to be statistics compiled by the Government around the turn of the century.

But regardless of whether the boast is true, the rolling fields and the Blue Ridge foothills have the beauty that make city folk yearn to own a farm.

Culpeper produced no sons to stand with Alexandria's Washington and Mason. But the county played its part in the Revolution and the turbulent years preceding it.

Its 16 justices of the peace resigned their commissions in 1765 in protest against the Stamp Act. Their polite but outraged letter to the royal lieutenant governor called it a "high Infringement of our most valuable Privileges as British Subjects . . ."

Took Rattlesnake Flag

WHEN WAR came the Culpeper Minute Men were organized to serve through the Revolution and later wars. Their flag displayed a rattlesnake, its head representing Virginia, and the 12 rattles the other Colonies. Below was the motto "Don't Tread On Me."

Between the Revolution and the Civil War, the most spectacular event in the county's history was a visit in 1825 from the aged Lafayette. On his way to see Jefferson, the Marquis stopped off to talk with old soldiers and for a dance in the evening.

He was entertained at Greenwood, the home of Judge John William Green of the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. Lucyle Dove Humphries, a direct descendent of the judge, will reign over the bicentennial festivities as Queen Culpeper.

But Culpeper is remembered in history chiefly as a Civil War battlefield.

Opposing armies marched and countermarched across the county through the war. Thirty-seven engagements were fought on its soil. Best known are Cedar Mountain and Brandy Station. The latter, fought just before the start of the Gettysburg campaign, was the largest all-cavalry encounter of the war.

In 1860, the Culpeper Minute Men were reorganized under the very same oak tree where they were originally organized in 1776. The ladies of Culpeper presented the unit with a colorful replica of the original flag, with its rattlesnake emblem.

Mustered into the Thirteenth Virginia Infantry, they served throughout the Civil War.

Another company formed for the Civil War in Culpeper was called the Little Fork Rangers.

In the pageant, the people playing the parts of the Rangers will be direct descendants of members of the company.

By the winter of 1863-1864, just before the Battle of the Wilderness, some 100,000 Federal troops were quartered in the county of Culpeper.

Some 1300 soldier dead are buried in the National Cemetery at Culpeper. Of these about 912 are unknown soldiers.

A. P. Hill a Native

THE CIVIL WAR also produced Culpeper's most famous native son—A. P. Hill, one of Lee's corps commanders.

Another famous son was William Green, referred to as one of the leading English-speaking lawyers of the early eighteenth century.

The town was the home of Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, former head of the American Red Cross and physician to President Wilson.

There are two national banks in the community with a combined reserve of more than 10 million dollars.

The county tax rate is $2.30 for each $100 assessed valuation. The tax rate in the town is 90 cents.

Culpeper is still small enough for almost everyone to be acquainted. A few weeks ago, J. H. Newhouse, vice chairman of the bicentennial committee, decided it would be fitting for Britain, which once ruled the county, to be represented at the celebration.

Newhouse sat down and wrote King George a letter telling him about it. But he took it over to the next county to mail for fear the word would get around.

Incidentally, Newhouse shortly afterward got a letter from the British Embassy informing him that on instructions of the King an official representative of the British government would attend the celebration.

Culpeper hasn't suffered from the wartime growing pains that are plaguing Virginia communities near Washington. But like all widespread, thinly populated areas, it has faced the problem of maintaining an adequate school plant. This has been further complicated by the necessity of providing dual facilities for whites and Negroes.

A one-million-dollar school construction program now is being completed which includes a new white high school, Culpeper's share of the regional Negro high school, and improvements to six white elementary schools.

Employment Off

SOME LIGHT industry in the town, including two textile mills, normally employs about 500 persons. Industrial employment is now off nearly 50 per cent, chiefly because of the textile slump.

The town of Culpeper is a quiet community of comfortable homes on shaded streets. No one appears to be either very wealthy or very poor. At the end of one of its two business streets stands the county courthouse; at the other is the railroad station.

The town operates under the manager form of government. It has no bonded indebtedness, though it has built and operates its own 2000-kw. electric power plant, water system, and sewage system and treatment plant.

Recreation, centered largely in the town, includes two movie houses, a swimming pool, and the Fourth of July horse show, which has been an annual event for nearly 50 years. Two weekly papers keep residents abreast of regional news.

Oldtime residents can't understand why anyone would want to leave Culpeper. They say that most everyone who has is making the bicentennial a good excuse to come back.

THE PROGRAM

HERE is a calendar of the main events of public interest in Culpeper's bicentennial celebration (all times listed are Eastern Standard):

Thursday, July 28, 10:30 a. m.—Coronation of Queen Culpeper by Vice President Alben W. Barkley at Rochester Ropes, Inc.

1 p. m.—Parade through the town, to be reviewed by Gov. William M. Tuck.

4 to 5:30 p. m.—Reception for the queen and her court at Rochester Ropes, Inc.

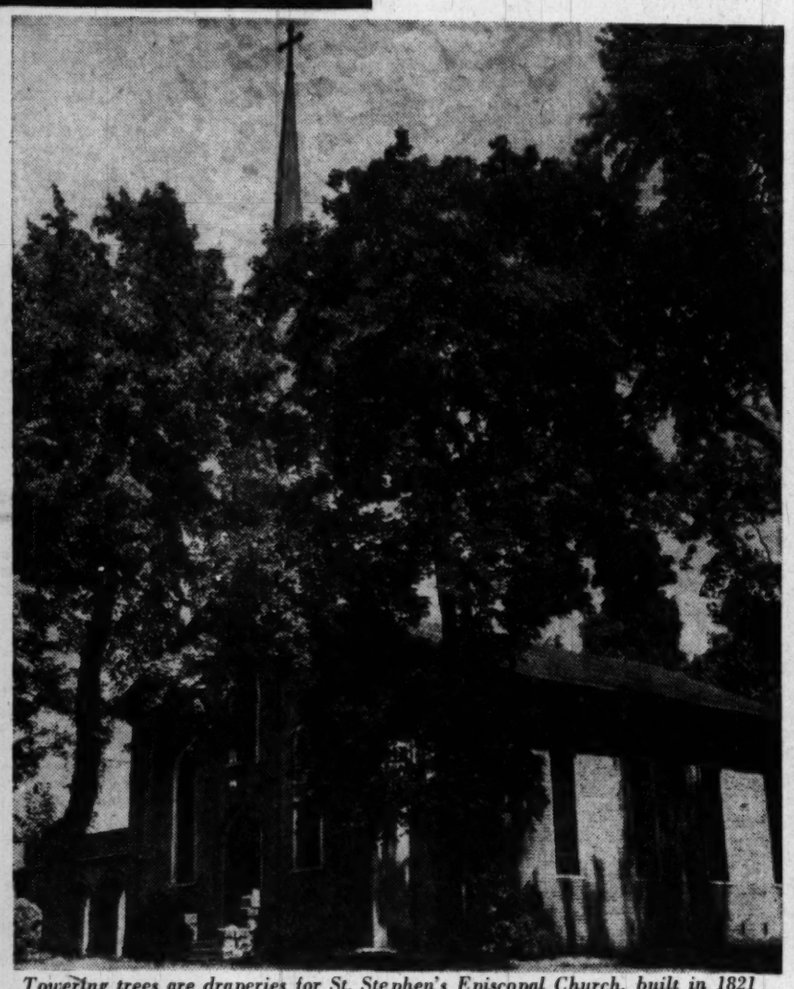
Thursday and Friday at 8 p. m.—Historical pageant, "Under Three Flags," to be presented on the high school football field.

Thursday and Friday at 10 p. m.—The Queen's Ball and the Governor's Ball at the Pot and Kettle Club.

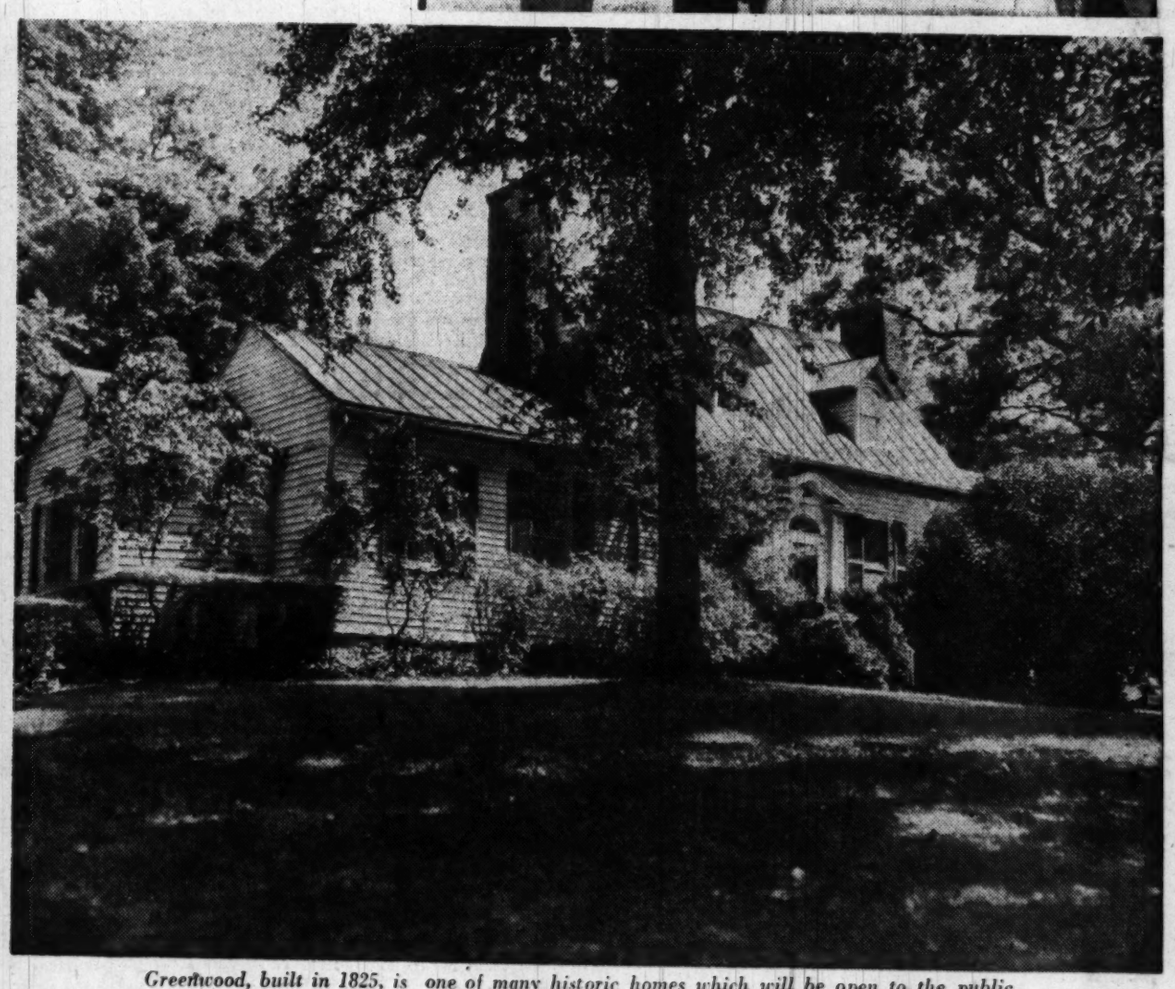
Saturday, 8 p. m.—Costume street dance and old-time fiddlers' contest.

Other events include exhibition of Marine equipment all day Thursday and tours of more than 20 historic houses on Friday and Saturday.

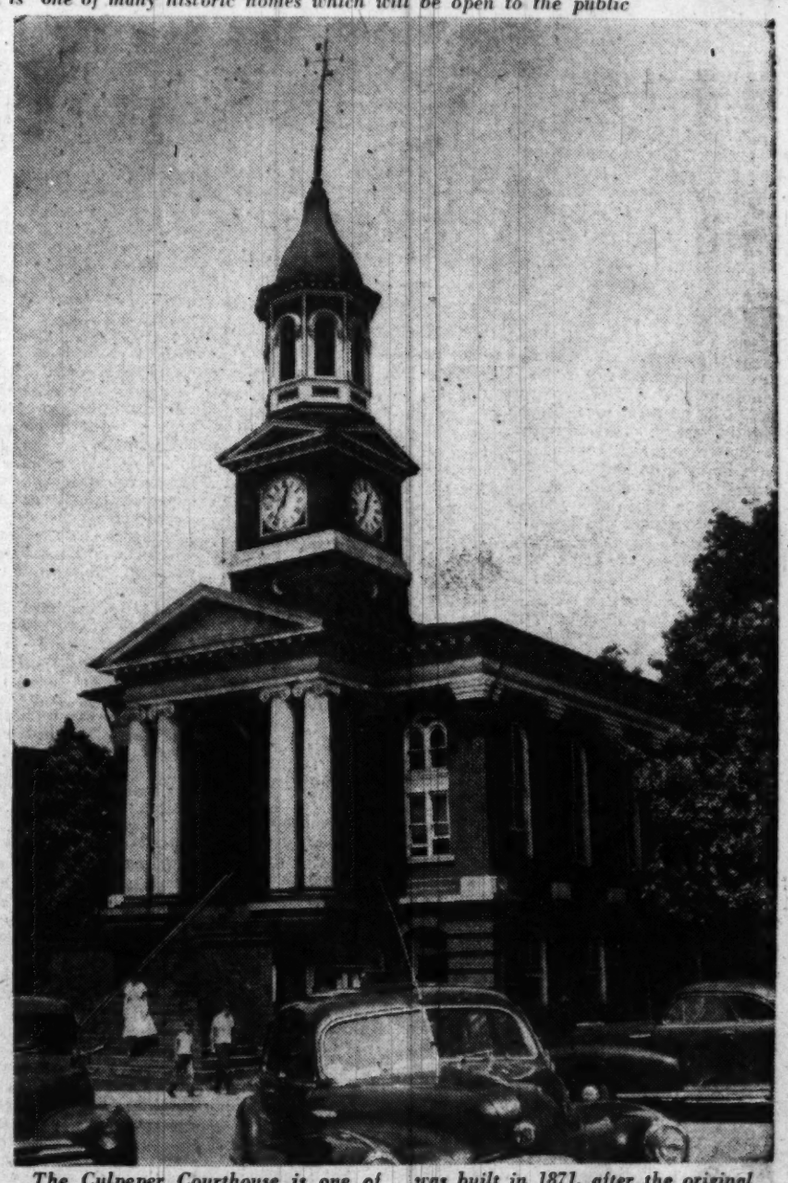
Culpeper is about 75 miles southwest of Washington and may be reached by traveling Route 211 to Warrenton and then south on Route 15 or 29. An alternate route is over Route 28 from Centerville through Manassas.



Towering trees are draperies for St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, built in 1821



Greenwood, built in 1825, is one of many historic homes which will be open to the public



The Culpeper Courthouse is one of the "younger" historic structures. It was built in 1871, after the original one burned down

Doby's Dash Latest of Famous Boners

With Shirley Povich

THE last thing Manager Lou Boudreau of the Indians might have surmised the other night was that Larry Doby would try to steal home at a time when the bases were full, none out, and Cleveland needing four runs to tie the Yankees.

POVICH

Doby did try to steal, didn't make it, and was slapped with a heavy fine by the Cleveland manager, who had no appreciation for the element of surprise as a tactic at that point.

But the exact magnitude of Doby's rockheaded thinking was best described by a Cleveland fan who grumbled: "And Boudreau should have fined him even if Doby had made it."

Certainly it was the fanciest boner in recent seasons, and magnified by the setting which found the second-place Indians battling to overhaul the Yanks. Every bleacherite and even your Aunt Kate knows "Ya don't try to steal home when yer four runs behind."

If Doby's brainstorm was unaccountable, at least the Cleveland outfielder is not in his solitude as a player who pulled a rock. Bonehead plays have decided many a ball game, lost a couple of pennants, and even World Series. And bigger stars than Doby have sprouted goats' horns.

The late Lou Gehrig deprived himself of the 1931 home run title of the American League when, playing heads-down baseball, he passed Lyn Lary on the baselines after knocking a home run into Griffith Stadium's center field bleachers.

That episode must take rank as one of the prize boners. It was hydra-headed in that three members of the Yankees collaborated to bring it about. Lary, on first when Gehrig's clout sailed toward the bleachers, was nearing third when he saw Center Fielder Harry Rice catch the ball.

WHAT Lary didn't see was the fact that Rice was catching the ball on the rebound from half way up in the empty bleachers. The third base coach who permitted Lary to race from third direct to the dug-out was Manager Joe McCarthy, who was leaping in glee in celebration of Gehrig's "homer," and had his back to both runners.

Gehrig, never presuming that Lary hadn't scored, rounded third base sans any coaching, and was out for passing a runner. His hit was scored as a triple and cost him the home run title that season. Never again did the embarrassed McCarthy coach at third base for the Yanks.

A couple of years later, in 1933, with the Nats battling the Yankees for the pennant Washington finally won, Gehrig figured in another famous boner. Monte Weaver had a 2-1 lead over the Yanks in Yankee Stadium in the ninth, with Gehrig on second, Dixie Walker on first and nobody out. Tony Lazzeri lashed a long line drive into right center.

Gehrig was the only person among the 60,000 in the park who wasn't certain Lazzeri's wallop would land safely. He held up at second base, for no reason, until Walker was virtually running up his back. When the ball did drop safely, Gehrig took off. Too late.

Goose Goslin ran the ball down and whipped it to Joe Cronin for the relay to the plate. The Nats had the benefit of two of the game's prize throwing arms. Cronin fired the ball to Catcher Luke Sewell from short center on the fly. Sewell tagged out Gehrig and then the on-rushing Walker for a rare double play at the plate. Lazzeri reached third on the hit on which Gehrig didn't score from second. But now two were out, and the Yanks lost.

Six years apart, two World Series were lost by some numbskull reactions of American League shortstops—Dick Bartell of the Tigers, and Johnny Pesky of the Red Sox.

THE Cincinnati Reds came up to the seventh inning of the seventh game of the 1940 series trailing the Tigers, 1-0, when Jimmy Ripple doubled over Right Fielder Bruce Campbell's head, with Frank McCormick on second base. Bartell took the relay, never dreaming that McCormick wouldn't hold up third, and fondled the ball in his glove.

Whereupon McCormick moved on toward the plate in what looked like a suicidal attempt to score. Bartell, with his back to the infield, wasn't tipped off by Charley Gehringer or Pinky Higgins that McCormick was on his way and the tying run scored without a play. The Reds went on to win.

Feller Pitches Tribe Closer to Lead, Beats Nats, 5 to 3; Yanks Lose, 2-1; Cards Cut Dodger Margin to Half Game

Brooklyn Slips

St. Louis Scores 2 in 9th, Wins, 5-4

Brooklyn, July 23 (AP).—The St. Louis Cardinals staged a two-run ninth-inning rally with two out today to whip the Brooklyn Dodgers, 5-4, and cut the Brooks' National League lead to a half game.

The triumph was the runner-up Cards' second straight victory over the Dodgers in the crucial four-game series which ends Monday.

Marty Marion singled home Stan Musial with the tying run and Joe Garagiola singled across Lou Klein with the winning run before a turnout of 28,396 fans.

Musial Walks in Ninth

The Cards, waging an uphill battle throughout, were within one strike of dropping the game in the pulse-pounding ninth. The Cards had trailed, 2-1, after two innings, 3-1 after six, and then tied the count with two in the seventh only to have Brooklyn take the lead again in its half of the seventh, 4-3.

Musial walked to start the final frame and Jack Banta, second Dodger pitcher, was relieved by Erv Palica. Palica, making his fifth appearance in as many days, fumbled Nippy Jones' bunt and both runners were safe.

Then the Dodgers got a break. With the infield in expecting a bunt, Enos Slaughter lined to First Sacker Gil Hodges who beat Jones back to first for an unassisted double play. Klein kept the rally going by drawing a walk.

Klein Beaks for Second

Palica got two strikes on Marion. Marion fouled off the next two pitches, then, as Klein broke for second on a hit-and-run play, Marion singled to right to score Musial with the tying run. Jackie Robinson had left his position to cover second as Klein broke and Marion's grounder zipped through the vacated spot. Garagiola followed with a hot single past short to plate Klein with the winning run.

Ted Wilks, who replaced Gerry Staley after the Card starter was lifted for a pinchhitter in the eighth, held the Dodgers' hitless over the final two heats to gain his eighth victory. He fanned four including Duke Snider for the final out with Gene Hermanski, who had walked, on first.

Staley was clipped for a run in the first on Snider's double and Robinson's single. The Cards tied it against Joe Hatten in the second on a triple by Slaughter and double by Ed Kazak.

Kazak, injured sliding into second, is expected to be out for a week with a sprained ankle.

Houtteman Hurls Tigers To Victory

Detroit, July 23 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers threw a roadblock in the path of the New York Yankees by beating them 2 to 1 today behind the brilliant five-hit hurling of young Art Houtteman.

The defeat cut the Yankees' lead over the second-place Cleveland Indians to 4½ games.

All the hits off Houtteman were in the first four frames, but only in the second inning could the Yankees score.

Joe DiMaggio walked to open that inning and advanced to third on Charley Keller's double. DiMaggio then raced home on Bobby Brown's long fly.

A double by George Kell gave the Tigers both their runs in the first inning. His blow scored Pat Mullin, who had doubled, and Vic Wertz, who drew one of Duane Pillette's two passes.

Pillette, recently recalled from Newark, tried hard to be able to celebrate his twenty-sixth birthday tomorrow with a triumph. He is the son of Herman Pillette, Tiger hurler in the early '20s.

After Snuffy Stirnweiss' single in the fourth, Houtteman retired 15 batters in a row before he gave his third and last walk to Keller in the ninth. The Detroit right-hander struck out five.

Kryhoski Sent To Oakland

Detroit, July 23 (AP).—Dick Kryhoski, first baseman, today was optioned to Oakland of the Pacific League by the New York Yankees to make a spot for Ralph Buxton, screwball pitcher.

Buxton reported to the Yanks today following his purchase from Oakland. He will be eligible to pitch tomorrow if needed.

Kryhoski was sent out on a 24-hour recall basis.

Vernon's Triple Puts Indians Only 4½ Back

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Cleveland, July 23.—Opportunists that they are, the Nats today took advantage of every chance they had to lose to the Cleveland Indians and were rewarded with a 5-3 defeat.

They led 2-0, rallied to tie the game at 3-3, but when struck by the horrible thought that their losing streak was in jeopardy, they leaped in and extended the string to eight in a row, their highest of the season.

By winning today the Indians gained a full game on the league-leading New York Yankees, who were losing to the Detroit Tigers, 2-1. The Indians now trail by 4½ games.

Unable to be beaten by Bob Feller by themselves, the Nats called on former Nat Mickey Vernon and he came through in grand style. He smacked a two-run triple in the eighth inning to dissolve a 3-3 tie and the Nats' efforts to lose the twenty-second game in their last 27 were crowned with success.

Eddie Yost also made a mighty donation to Feller's seventh victory. The stocky third baseman booted an easy roller with two away in the fifth and this opened the gates for three Indians runs.

* * * * * *

And Lloyd Hittle's contribution deserves mention also. It was he, the $65,000 rookie left-hander, who pitched two-hit, two-run ball in the eighth to keep the Nats rolling in reverse in high gear.

All of this was most delightful to a whopping Saturday afternoon crowd of 47,605 which included 21,354 cash customers with the rest ladies and children, guests of the management, as the Nats should be.

Feller, whose record now stands at 7-8, achieved his success on a yield of five hits, but his performance wasn't as glittering as it sounds. He was in deep trouble on three occasions and in the latter stages of the game his defense had to come up with several snappy plays to keep him in the game.

Peck Gets Pinch Single

Joe Haynes, bidding for his third success, started for the Nats and had a 4-hit, 2-0 lead over Feller when Yost came through with his fifth-inning error.

Dale Mitchell opened the inning with a single and two outs later he went to second as Joe Gordon cracked out another one of Cleveland's 11 hits. Lou Boudreau followed with a two-hopper to Yost and Yost booted the ball to load the bases.

Hal Peck came off the bench to stroke a two-run pinch single and Bob Kennedy laced one of his three singles to drive in another run and give the Indians a 3-2 lead before Sid Hudson could come in and stop the rally.

Feller lost his lead in the eighth and may have come out of the inning trailing instead of tied had the Nats not attempted a double steal, which got Feller out of the inning.

With the bases loaded as the result of a pass to Clyde Vollmer, a single by Yost and an intentional pass to Gil Coan, Sherry Robertson flied deep to center to score Johnny Simmons, running for Vollmer.

Stewart flied to center and Yost

2 D. C. Golfers Earn Trips to Chicago Tourney

Lee Edwards and John Eisinger, two of Washington's top schoolboy golfers yesterday earned all-expense free trips to Chicago for the Hearst National Junior Tournament August 2-5.

They won the trips by winning a tournament over Baltimore's Mount Pleasant Country Club course Friday and yesterday. Edwards, captain of Bullis Prep, beat Roy Muth, 1 up, in 21 holes yesterday. Eisinger, member of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High team won, 5-4, over Bob Dedrick.

Edwards is the son of Leila Edwards, The Washington Post women's golf reporter.

Bosox Batter Browns, 16-5

St. Louis, July 23 (AP).—The Red Sox had a field day with Brownie pitching today as Boston clubbed out 19 hits for a 16 to 5 rout of St. Louis before a slim crowd of 2169.

Bobby Doerr opened the Boston attack in the second with a home run while the sacks were empty. He sent his eleventh ball of the season out of the park in the seventh—this time with Johnny Pesky and Ted Williams on base. Williams also clouted a four-bagger in the third with a man on.

Don DiMaggio had only one hit—a single in the fourth inning—but it extended to 18 the number of games in which he has hit safely.

Lone bright spot for the home club was the pitching and batting of Reliefer Ralph Winegarner, recently taken from his coaching job to hurl for the last-place Browns. He replaced Al Papai who in turn had taken over for Red Embree.

Winegarner hit into the left field bleachers for a home run in the eighth to score behind Ed Pellagrini, also he retired the Red Sox without a hit in the top of the eighth, the only inning in which the visitors failed to get on base and one of two in which they didn't score.

Coaltown Leads All the Way To Win Arlington Handicap

By Charles Dunkley

Chicago, July 23 (AP).—Coaltown, the Nation's top handicap star, today streaked to his tenth victory in 11 starts this season in winning the $54,700 Arlington Handicap by 3 lengths.

Dixiana Stable's Star Reward, only horse to defeat Coaltown this year, finished second. Calumet Farm's 8-year-old Armed, Coaltown's stablemate, was third, a length behind Star Reward. Stud Poker was fourth, 5 lengths back of Armed. Then followed Oscar J. Breault's Brolite and Peter J. Valenti's Caillou Rouge.

Three of nine overnight entrants were withdrawn before post time. Calumet took out the Kentucky Derby winner, Ponder, which will run Monday in a mile prep for next Saturday's $60,000 added Arlington classic. Dixiana then scratched Star Reward's running mate, Shy Guy, and Walmac Farm finally reduced the handicap field to six with the withdrawal of Volcanic.

The Calumet Farm entry went to the post at odds of 2 to 5, with Coaltown paying $2.80 to win. There was no place or show betting because of the small field. A sweltering crowd of 27,127 witnessed Coaltown's run-away gallop.

The twentieth running of the handicap proved to be just another outing for the 4-year-old horse, which surged out of the starting gate first and never was headed. At one time he had six lengths lead after Edward E. Voynow's Stud Poker, winner of the race last year, had forced him to set a hot early pace. His time for the mile and a quarter was 2:03 2/5.

It was Coaltown's seventh stakes triumph. The others are: the McLennan and Widener Handicaps at Hialeah, the Edward Burke handicap at Havre De Grace, the Gallant Fox at Jamaica, the Roger Williams at Narragansett, and the rich Stars and Stripes at Arlington Park July 4. His only defeat was in the Equipoise mile at Arlington June 25 when Star Reward passed him in the stretch to win

Ace Admiral Sets Record

Arcadia, Calif., July 23 (U.P.).—Ace Admiral, slamming down the stretch to a five-length victory in the $50,000 Sunset Handicap, today smashed the world's 1⅝-miles record set 29 years ago by his famed grandfather, Man o' War.

The chestnut colt, ridden by Johnny Longden, sped over the distance in 2:39 4-5, knocking a full second off the mark set by Man o' War at Belmont Park in 1920 and tied by Historian at Hollywood Park in 1946.

The race was the closing feature of the 50-day Hollywood Park at Santa Anita meeting.

Ace Admiral, with Longden giving a spirited ride, took the lead at the start and kept it all the way, opening up his margin in the stretch from three lengths to five at the wire. Natural, a longshot colt who had failed to win a race at the meeting, was second; Dinner Gong was third and Pretal fourth.

Ace Admiral, owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Arden Graham's Maine Chance Farm, ran as an entry with On Trust and Esprit de France. The trio was permitted to get away at five to two odds and paid $7.50, $3.70 and $2.60. Natural paid $12.50 to place and $4.90 to show and Dinner Gong paid $3.20 to show.

The race was the most brilliant of Ace Admiral's career and stamped him as the leading handicap horse of the meeting as well as one of the great horses in competition today.

The son of Heliopolis was expected to take the lead in the field of 10 horses in the long race but there were few who figured he could hold it for a mile and five-eighths and increase his margin as he ran down the stretch.

The order of finish behind the first three horses was Pretal, Chiloe II, On Trust, Honeymoon, Esprit de France, Lurline B., and Stepfather.

Plans Appeal

Barred Trainer Offers $1000 For Doping Evidence at Laurel

A suspended trotting trainer, who wants to become an associate racing judge in Maryland, yesterday offered $1000 reward for information establishing identity of the person who doped his horse.

Homer Harden, Smithfield, N. C., was banned for a year by the Maryland Racing Commission at a hearing last Thursday for "gross negligence." The saliva test of his Key Volo, $43.20 winner at Laurel Raceway July 11, showed traces of morphine.

At the hearing, Harden protested his innocence. Key Volo, owned by George Woodley, Roseboro, N. C., had been in charge of a groom and Harden's 14-year-old son.

Harden, who has been in the harness sport only since 1946, said he had prepared an application to become an associate racing judge in Maryland next year. He added, "Seeking to become a race official, I certainly never would tamper with a horse."

Harden, onetime schoolteacher, said he has been working with Bureau of Narcotics agents on the case.

The 50-year-old Carolinian said he will appeal to the United States Trotting Association the Maryland ruling. His appeal will be based on the contention that there is no such a charge as "gross negligence" under national or Maryland State rules.

Shares 'Not for Sale'

Nat Stockholders Convene, Decide There's Nothing New

After a brief meeting yesterday with Treasurer William Richardson II, President Clark Griffith insisted there was "nothing new" on the stock situation of the Washington ball club.

For weeks, rumors have been circulating that the Richardson family has been trying to dispose of its 40 per cent share.

However, Griffith said that the 27-year-old Richardson told him the stock was "not up for sale at this time."

According to Griffith, Richardson said the estate of his father, George M., who died last August, probably won't be settled for a year.

Griffith also was told that the "situation may change" but was assured the first opportunity to buy the stock.

Griffith controls 45 per cent of the club's stock and has admitted interest in acquiring the 40 per cent owned equally by young Richardson, his mother, and two sisters, Mrs. Charles B. Warwell, Pitman, N. J., and Mrs. Robert B. Brown, Philadelphia.

At the moment, Griffith thinks the market value of the stock is about $50. "It fluctuates," he said and added wistfully, "when you have a losing streak it goes down."

Back in 1919, when Griffith's original partner was George Richardson's brother, William, each share was valued at only $15.

Stock dividends have been paid steadily.

Pirates Score Six in Ninth, Beat Braves, 12-9

1925 Team, That Is

At Long Last Haight Forgives Pirates

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

SPORTS FANS, as a rule, get over desappointment quickly.

Our favorite athlete or team loses. We feel down in the dumps, we shake it off and life becomes beautiful again.

Haight

For instance, I was only a couple of days forgetting the 73-0 lacing the Chicago Bears gave our Redskins in the 1940 Championship game.

I slept pretty well the night Al Foreman knocked Washington's Goldie Ahearn cold at old Berwyn Arena and I felt only pity when Walter Haight, the horse, broke down at Charles Town with my eating-money riding.

Once in a while defeat sticks in our craw. It's happened to me, but I didn't go to the extreme like a certain reporter who, riled by the football defeat of his alma mater, drank himself out of a job, guzzling the full contents before taking the bottle from his lips.

I shudder to think what I would have done to the Pittsburgh Pirates if I had had a machine gun one dismal day's en dat Forbes Field.

Herb Heft of "Wondrous Nats" fame is only a mildly interested fan compared to the Walter Haight of October, 1925. I had rooted the Nats into the World Championship the year before and 12 months later I was a young reporter assigned to his first series.

And I had to watch the Nats go down to a 9-7 defeat in the final game—baseball played in smoke, fog, rain. I had seen Washington take a 4-run lead in the first inning and have a 6-3 advantage in the fourth.

AT THE END OF THE FIFTH, it was 6-4 Washington as the cold drizzle turned into real rain. I watched as Judge Landis, elbows on the railing and chin cupped in hands, refuse to call the game.

I saw old Walter Johnson, entrusted by Manager Bucky Harris with "all the way or nothing," slip and slide in the puddle formed around the rubber. I watched the Pittsburgh ground crew bring cinders and sawdust to the box only when a Pirate was pitching, it seemed.

I suffered through the seventh and eighth when the Bucs tied the score and then went ahead despite a homer by Roger Peckinpaugh.

I rooted to the last out and then I began hating the Pirates, Pittsburgh and all the suburbs of Pittsburgh. I felt like doing something drastic, like putting out the steel mill fires or dynamiting Forbes Field.

But I got over it. In fact, when I began this piece I had to phone our library to find out the score.

MONDAY NIGHT, the Pirates will be here. Not the same players, of course, but representing Pittsburgh and I haven't anything but kindly feelings toward them.

They are going to play the Nats in a game the proceeds of which will go to Attorney General Tom Clark's juvenile delinquency fund to buy recreation equipment for the kids of the Washington area.

Getting back to that cold, wet day in Pittsburgh, I had plenty of company in my disappointment. Eighteen Washington boys, winners of a popularity contest, went down swinging with the Nats that day.

These youngsters were members of a sandlot baseball team, 16 to 18 years. A man from another department of the paper had them in his charge.

Before the series began in Pittsburgh, there was a two-day delay caused by rain and snow flurries. The restless kids began to get on the nerves of their chaperone who finally cracked.

It seems he marched to the door of their hotel dormitory, tossed in a huge roll of bills and said, "Boys, you can go for yourselves."

It wasn't long before the hotel manager phoned our headquarters that something was amiss with the young guests and I was assigned to straightening out the situation.

I ARRIVED ON THE SCENE just in time to hear an 18-year-old, who left Washington with a dollar, yell, "I'll shoot 200 bucks."

I didn't have to be a relation of Sherlock Holmes to determine that a man's-size dice game was in progress—with the expense money at stake.

While I was getting mentally arranged to bring things back into shape, the boy with the dice chanted "$20 bucks open" and I threw down two tens. He came out with an 11 and raked in the bills.

I put my foot on the dice and gave a lecture on the evils of gambling, particularly with money like the expense cash which really didn't belong to them.

After much persuasion, I recovered all the money with the exception of the $20 I had lost in the game, being voted down on my suggestion that I participated only to join the fun.

They were good kids. I meet up with them once in a while and always the talk centers on the 1925 world series—Sam Rice's catch of Earl Smith's fly when the Nat outfielder fell into the stands; Peckinpaugh's eight errors for a series record; Joe Harris' three home runs, etc.

Some of them probably will be at Monday night's game. I'll bet they don't hold any grudge against the Pirates.

I don't. In fact, I hope they won't lose by more than one run.

Westlake's 17th Homer Aids Victory

Boston, July 23 (AP).—After spotting Lefty Warren Spahn an early 9-4 lead, the Pittsburgh Pirates today settled down to a grim battle and pulled out a 12-9 victory with a six-run rally in the ninth.

The Pirates clouted the Boston pitching trio for a total of 10 hits including Wally Westlake's seventeenth homer against Spahn with one on in the fourth inning.

Spahn still had a 2-run margin when replaced by Nelson Potter with none out in the final frame. That righthanded fireman, who gave way to Bob Hogue, was charged with the loss.

During their winning rally, launched by Phil Masi, the recent Braves catcher, 11 Pirates went to bat. Masi and three others banged out singles, two drew bases on balls, another was struck by a Potter pitch and, with the bases loaded, Pete Reiser enabled the last two Pirates to score by dropping Stan Rojek's fly.

150 Compete In Swimming Meet Tonight

Men's high-board and the women's low-board diving will be the climaxing feature of the second annual Prince Georges Country Club invitational swimming meet tonight.

The men's event has attracted two of the area's finest performers in Jimmy Russell of Baltimore's Lakewood Club, and District of Columbia A. A. U. Titlist Irvin Bridgers, who finished one-two, respectively, in the inaugural Prince Georges meet last summer.

The women's division will unveil a national star in 19-year-old Mary Frances Cunningham, former University of Miami star. The Newark, N. J., girl finished third last spring in both the low and high-board in the women's national championships in Florida. 'Miss Cunningham faces formidable opposition, however, in Barbara McCutcheon, D. C. A. A. U. champ, who won the diving in 1948.

Meet records are expected to receive some revision tonight, what with eight D. C. titlists in the running.

Lakewood, winner of the men's team title last year, may run into difficulty within its own precinct as K of C and the Y-Brook teams of Baltimore both have filed large entries.

Ambassador is the defending team champion in the women's division, and, being fortified with a large contingent of seasoned swimmers, is shooting for a repeat. The downtown club will have three girls, Free-styler Wilhelmina Orme, Barbara Hobelman and Barbara McCutcheon, defending crowns. Strong opposition can be expected from Takoma Park in the women's race. Takoma will be paced by Bettie Jane Roland, a many-time District champion, and veterans Virginia Haggerty, Dot Ballos, Mary Neate and Anne Granginger.

Jockey Palumbo Hurt in Track Fall

Cumberland, Md., July 23 (AP).—Sammy Palumbo, veteran jockey of the half-mile tracks, was injured in the fifth race at the Cumberland track today when his mount fell shortly after leaving the starting gate.

He was taken to the track's first-aid station and then removed to a hospital for examination of his shoulders and neck which Palumbo said felt as though they were "jammed."

'Y' Boy Tennis Deadline Nears

The YMCA boys summer tennis tournament will get under way next Tuesday with youngsters 17, 14, 12 and 9 years old and under competing in separate divisions.

Entries must be filed before 10 tomorrow night with Palmer Rutherford, 1732 G st. nw., NA. 8250.

Lincoln Playground Wins Region K Track

Lincoln Playground racked up 161 points to literally run away with the Recreation Department Region K track championship yesterday.

Trailing the winners were Douglas, 30; Barry Farms, 27; Lovejoy, 20; Payne, 7; Syphax, 4, and Randall, 1. Standouts for Lincoln were Ernest Williams and Vincent Kelly.

Nats, Bucs Play Monday

Pittsburgh Brings Homer Hitters To Charity Game

The Nats, currently having trouble trying to win in their own league, go out of their way for charity Monday night at Griffith Stadium to take on the National League's home-run-hitting Pittsburgh Pirates.

It's a benefit game for Attorney General Tom Clarke's recreation fund to combat juvenile delinquency.

The players, of course, are donating their services. And the Pirates are paying their traveling expenses. Stadium employes, and the umpires, are working for free.

Regular season prices prevail and the game starts at 8:30 p. m.

Over 20,000 Expected

A gathering of more than 20,000 is expected to turn out to see one of the hardest slugging outfields in the big leagues. Ralph Kiner, with 26 homers, the leader in the majors, has two strong running mates, Wally Westlake and Rookie Dino Restelli.

Kiner has a .327 batting average and an impressive runs-batted-in total to go with those homers. Westlake hit his seventeenth round-tripper yesterday and is batting .310; Restelli started off with a bang and now has eight homers and a .317 average.

It's going to be interesting to see if the heavy-hitting right-handed trio can find the left-field range at Griffith Stadium, longest in both leagues.

After the recent All-Star trimming, it's a cinch the National Leaguers will bear down against Washington. The Pirates are a little miffed anyway at losing in June to the Nats at Cooperstown, N. Y., 8-7.

From Boston, Manager Bill Meyer reported that he'd field his strongest team. "We'll all be down," Meyer said, "and will be trying to even the score."

Had Bad Start

The Pirates got off to a horrible start, being in the cellar when the then fourth-place Nats scored that victory at Cooperstown. Currently, the Bucs are on the move. They're in sixth place and would be higher if they didn't have a penchant for losing those close ones.

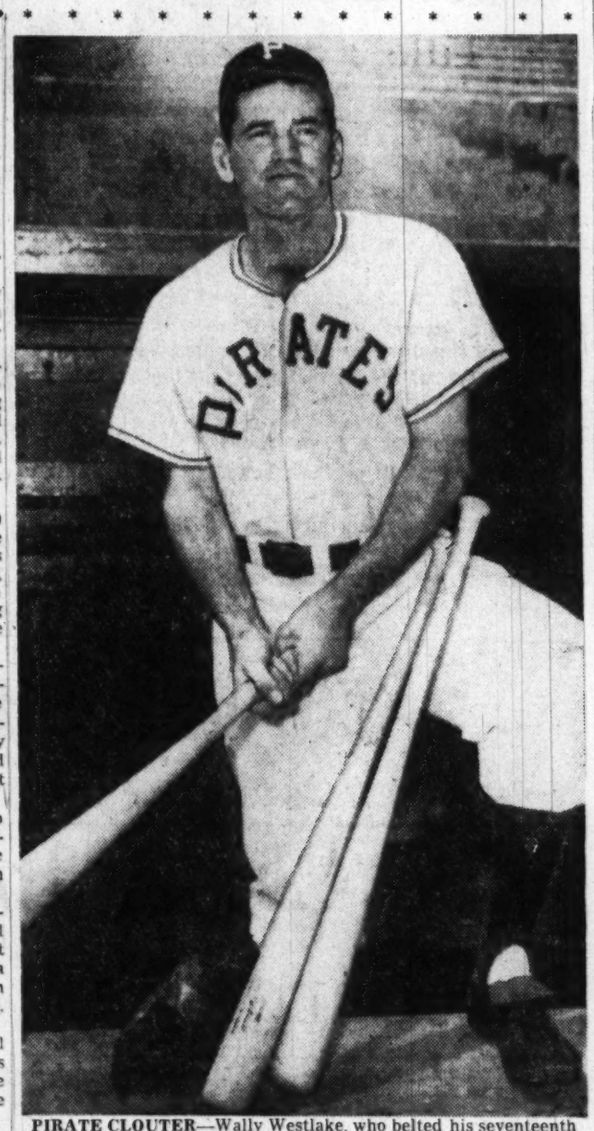
The recent Brooklyn series was a good example. The Bucs won, 8-6, with Kiner driving in five runs with two homers. They lost two in the ninth inning, 4-3, and 7-6.

Meyer plans to start Ray Poat one-time Cleveland and New York Giant performer. In a recent exhibition game, Poat hurled a three-hitter to beat the World Champion Indians, 1-0.

Manager Joe Kuhel expects to start Dick Weik for Washington.

Lone Pittsburgh absentee will be Rip Sewell, veteran blooperball artist. Washington fans won't be able to see him demonstrate it because Sewell's wife is ill and he left the team yesterday.

NOTES ON THE VISITORS: Dixie Walker easily qualifies as the most expensive pinch-hitter in baseball. He makes $22,500 for the occasional turn he takes at the plate . . . Manager Meyer's doing an excellent job with a crew a lot of other pilots gave up on—15 of the Bucs played with other big league clubs . . . The lengthy list includes Ernie Bonham, Yanks; Clyde McCullough, Cubs; Murry Dickson, Cards; Danny Murtaugh, Phil Masi and Johnny Hopp, Braves; Ed Stevens, Browns; Eddie Bockman and Bob Muncrief, Indians; Elmer Riddle, Reds; Ray Poat, Giants; and the Dodger delegation, Hugh Casey, Stan Rojek, Vic Lombardi and Walker . . . Despite their sixth-pace standing, the Bucs have drawn 844,315 in 38 games in Pittsburgh, a rabid baseball town . . . The Bucs have won only four of 13 games with league-leading Brooklyn and three were on homers by Ralph Kiner at Ebbets Field . . . Kiner couldn't hit a one there last season . . . Last time Washington and Pittsburgh played here was in the 1925 World Series . . . It would be a big break for the kids locally if Monday night's attendance approaches the 30,704 crowd that saw Brooklyn here in a pre-season game.



PIRATE CLOUTER—Wally Westlake, who belted his seventeenth homer in yesterday's 12-9 triumph over Boston, will be taking aim at Griffith Stadium's faraway leftfield wall in the big benefit game tomorrow night against Washington

Kavakos Blanks Eagles Behind Smith

Jack Smith hurled a one-hitter to pace Kavakos Grill to a 5-0 shutout over the Eagles in an Alexandria Municipal league softball game yesterday at the Alexandria Municipal Stadium.

Illness Forces Pep-Compo Postponement

Hartford, Conn., July 23 (AP).—Willie Pep, the world's featherweight champ, underwent an operation for hemorrhoids today forcing a postponement of his title bout with Eddie Compo. The fight was to have been held at Waterbury Thursday.

Setting of a new date for the scrap has been delayed temporarily pending a conference among Lou Viscusi, Pep's manager; Rocco Mara, the promoter, and Willie's physician.

Meantime, Samuel H. Malkan, Connecticut's new athletic commissioner, said he had been informed by Dr. Rocco J. Romanello, who operated on Pep, that the fighter might be in condition to enter the ring again in about three weeks or a month.

"Dr. Romanello told me," said Malkan, "that Pep will have to remain in the hospital for a week or more, and that it would be about three weeks after that before he could fight again."

Navy Promotes Coach Martin

Annapolis, Md., July 23 (AP).—Ben Martin, former Navy end and coach of last season's undefeated plebe football team, was named today assistant to Head Coach George Sauer.

The 28-year-old native of Prospect Park, Pa., whose promotion to the varsity staff was announced by Capt. H. H. Caldwell, director of athletics, will specialize in tutoring ends.

After winning his letter in football at Princeton, Martin entered the Naval Academy and became one of its standout athletes. He performed on the varsity football and track teams.

He succeeds Marine Lieut. Bramlett, who is leaving the service.

Caldwell said no one has been appointed yet to take over Martin's former duties as plebe coach.

Giants Win, 10-6; Rigney, Mize Homer

New York, July 23 (AP).—Billy Rigney and Johnny Mize climaxed two-out rallies in the seventh and eighth innings today with home runs to spark the New York Giants to a 10-6 triumph over the Chicago Cubs.

Trailing, 6-3, going into the seventh, the Giants battered Starter Warren Hacker and Reliefer Walt Dubiel for four runs to take a lead they never relinquished.

Heintzleman Wins 13th For Phils, 8-2

Philadelphia, July 23 (AP).—Southpaw Ken Heintzelman pitched the Philadelphia Phils to an 8-2 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds today to hang up his ninth straight victory and his thirteenth of the season against three defeats.

He ran his string of scoreless innings to 32 before the Reds broke the streak with two runs in the seventh.

The Phillies drove Johnny Vander Meer from the box in the first inning, scoring three runs. Richie Ashburn lined a single to left and scored on Gran Hammer's double to the same spot.

Sisler Also Doubles

Dick Sisler also hit a two bagger to left and Hamner crossed the plate. Del Ennis beat out a hit to Grady Hatton and Sisler went to third. Everett Lively replaced Vander Meer and when Andy Seminick hit into a double play, Sisler scored.

In the fourth Seminick hit his fifteenth home run of the season to put the Phils in front, 4-0.

The Phils drove Lively from the box and picked up four runs in the sixth. Ennis singled and Seminick walked. Stan Hollmig singled, scoring Ennis.

Rally Continues

Frank Fanovich replaced Lively. He walked Willie Jones to load the bases and Seminick scored on Buddy Blattner's fly to right. Heintzelman sacrificed and Ashburn's single sent both Hollmig and Jones home.

Cincinnati broke Heintzelman's string of scoreless innings when they sent two runs over the plate in the seventh. Johnny Wyroster singled and after Jim Bloodworth flied out, Claude Corbitt and Danny Litwhiler, batting for Fanovich, hit safely to score Wyrostek. Another hit by Harry Walker sent Corbitt home.

Beat Del Ray, 4-1

Georgetown Boys Pull Triple Play

Shortstop Bobby Lake, Second Baseman Marvin Rosenblatt and First Baseman Darrell Herman of the Georgetown 16-year-old team sprang the prize defensive play of the local sandlot baseball season yesterday on the Ellipse.

Leading, 2-1, in the fifth inning, Georgetown was in a jam with no outs and Del Ray players on first and second bases. Buster Terry then sent a "sure" hit between short and third.

However, Lake made a running backhand stab of the liner for one out, threw to Rosenblatt doubling the runner off second, and Marvin threw to Herman at first for a triple play.

Georgetown went on to defeat Del Ray, 4-1, and won the Boys Club of Washington's senior league first half championship. Del Ray started its second half season a half hour later, and beat Federal Storage, 3-2, and Eastern Branch nosed out Barney Neighborhood House, 3-2.

In a nonleague game, the Marx Jewelers trimmed the Ballston Indians, 7-3, on the Ellipse. Jimmy Pantos hit a triple and single for Marx as Ed Hughes pitched winning nine-hit ball.

The City Unlimited League starts its second half today with four games, feature of which is the Howat-Bamby meeting at 3 p. m. on the South Ellipse. Bamby finished second and Howat third in the first half pennant race . . . With the Departmental League season over, the National City Junior League games will move over to the South Ellipse for its games beginning Monday. In Hampton Class

Jack Martin's My Dream Takes Cambridge Boat Lead

Cambridge, Md., July 23 (AP).—Jack Martin sailed his My Dream to a slight lead in the Hampton class today in the Cambridge Yacht Club's eleventh annual regatta.

The national Hampton champion from the Annapolis Yacht Club raced his red-hulled boat to second place in the morning race on the Choptank River. He then came in fifth in the afternoon affair to pile up a slight margin on points.

Some 60 boats—largest fleet in the history of the regatta—competed. Hamptons, numbering 21, comprised the biggest single class.

A third race in each class will be run off Sunday.

HAMPTONS (First race)—1, Greyhound, owned by Clay Gatewood of the Willoughby Yacht Club; 2, My Dream, Jack Martin, Annapolis Y. C.; 3, Corsair, Beau Joesting, Annapolis Y. C. Second race—1, Elena, Conrad Rosemert, Cambridge Y. C.; 2, Sho Nuff, Leslie Schneider, Hampton Y. C.; 3, Nimrod, Sam LeCompte, Cambridge Y. C.

STARS (First race)—1, Duchess, Mason Sheehan, Tred Avon Y. C.; 2, White Shadow, Billy Myers, Tred Avon Y. C.; 3, Gadfly, John Noble, Tred Avon. Second race—1, White Shadow; 2, Duchess; 3, Gadfly.

Hits—Staley, 9 in 7; Wilks, 0 in 2; Hatten, 6 in 6; Banta, 1 in 2; Palica, 2 in ⅔; Erskine, 0 in ⅓. Passed ball—Campanella. Winner—Wilks (8-3). Loser—Palica (7-5).

Local 82 Wins 1st Half Title

Local 82, A.F. of L., defeated Veterans Center, 16-10, yesterday at Banneker to win the first half championship in their D. C. Recreation League unlimited class.

A previous playoff attempt wound up in a 13-13 tie. In a second half league game, also at Banneker, Fort Myer edged D. C. Clowns, 7-5.

Ray, Malone Tie At Gibson Island

Gibson Island, Md., July 23 (AP).—Bob Ray and Tim Malone were tied for the lead today in a regatta to crown the champion comet sailor of Chesapeake Bay.

Representing the Potomac River Sailing Association, Ray sailed his Lucky Strike to victory in the morning race, two places ahead of Malone.

In the afternoon brush it was Malone, the Indian Landing skipper, who took first place in his Frantic, while Ray finished third.

This gave each pilot a total of 34¼ points, just ¼ of a point more than Bob Gibson of the Miles River Yacht Club, who was second in both events with his green Gryphon.

Eighteen boats competed.

The third race will be sailed on the Magothy River tomorrow to decide the winner of the Pavana Bowl and the bay's representatives in the international comet championships.

The three best performers in the territorial championships will be named to go to the internationals at Hyannis, Mich., September 8-10.

Dan Arena Pilots Such Crust to Record in Trials

Detroit, July 23 (U.P.).—Daring Dan Arena piloted underdog Such Crust I to a new Harmsworth course record today to label the Detroit craft as the top American contender for next week's international speedboat classic.

A runner-up finisher all season, Such Crust amazed 50,000 spectators who lined the Detroit River by speeding around the seven-mile course in 97.992 miles per hour on the second lap of the first heat.

Doby's Dash Brings Other Boners to Mind

series and the Red Sox tied the score at 3-3 in the eighth. Enos Slaughter was on first base when Harry Walker doubled to left of center. Leon Culberson made a neat pick-up of the ball and lobbed it lazily to Shortstop Pesky. The Red Sox shortstop, getting that kind of a throw, didn't surmise that Slaughter might be tearing for home on a hit which ordinarily called for him to hold up at third.

Slaughter scored while World Series Goat Pesky fondled the ball in his glove.

Boners have been called "Merkles" ever since 1908 when Fred Merkle of the Giants pulled the most famous skull of all. It cost the Giants the pennant, after they presumed they had beaten the Cubs. They read the next day that they hadn't.

On that September 12, 1908, it was 1-1 between the Giants and the Cubs in the last of the ninth at the Polo Grounds with two out and Harry McCormick of the Giants on third, Merkle on first and Al Bidwell up. Bidwell singled cleanly to center and McCormick broke for home. When Merkle saw McCormick near the plate, he cut short his own dash to second and raced for the right field club house.

Then ensued the most famous rhubarb of all. Second Baseman Johnny Evers of the Cubs yelled to Center Fielder Artie Hoffman to throw the ball in. Merkle could still be forced at second and McCormick's run wouldn't count. Meanwhile, Joe Tinker grabbed Base Umpire Bob Emslie to point out the fact the Cubs were still trying to make a play on Merkle.

IT wound up in a mess. Hoffman threw the ball in, wild, and it hit Tinker in the neck. Joe McGinnity, Giant's first base coach, noting what the Cubs were up to, grabbed up the ball and tried to throw it out of the park. Pitcher Hank Pfiester grabbed McGinnity's arm, and the ball went toward third base. Fans were now on the field and one of them picked the ball up.

Steinfelt of the Cubs tried to wrestle the ball away from the fan and succeeded with the help of Pitcher Floyd Crow who popped the fan on the chin. Trusting to no more throws, Steinfelt carried the ball over to Evers at second base. Evers held it high over his head to show Umpire-In-Chief Hank O'Day that he now had possession.

The Cubs claimed that they had retired the Giants without a run, but they got no decision from O'Day, who left the park. From downtown that night, O'Day announced that he had ruled the game a 1-1 tie. Merkle thus gave his name to every subsequent boner in baseball.

The Nats have figured in their share of rockhead performances, the latest of which occurred last week when Sam Mele and Eddie Yost collaborated on a twin-boner, Needing one run to tie the Tigers, the Nats had Yost on third and Mele on first with one out, when Buddy Lewis sent a long fly to Center Fielder Johnny Groth.

That was calculated to bring in the tying run. It didn't. Yost loafed home, never presuming that Mele would try to go to second after the catch. Mele did try, and reached second before the slow-moving Yost reached home. But the trouble was that Mele was greeted at second base by the official league ball in the glove of Shortshop Johnny Lipon, and it was a double play, nullifying Yost's run.

For the Nats, it was retribution. They won a game earlier in the season on much the same sort of skull by Pinch Runner Lou Stringer of the Red Sox. At a time when Boston's tying run was scoring from third on a clean hit by Sam Mele, then with the Red Sox, Stringer over-ran second and was out and the inning over before the run crossed the plate.

Even as nimble-thinking a ball player as Joe Judge pulled a rock that once cost Washington a ball game. Playing in Philadelphia, with the score tied in the ninth and the A's having a man on second, Judge took a throw from Roger Peckinpaugh for what he was certain was the third out. He rolled the ball toward the pitcher's mound and then was greatly embarrassed to learn, when the A's runner had crossed the plate, that the run counted because the umpire had called the hitter safe at first base.

MICKEY VERNON cost the Nats a ball game somewhat similarly in Boston a couple of years ago in the ninth. The Red Sox had Bobby Doerr on second base with one out and the score tied. Vernon took a throw from shortstop, and argued furiously with Umpire Bill McGowan after McGowan called the batter safe. So long did Vernon argue that Doerr scrammed all the way home.

But the Nats' most notable skull was contributed by the inimitable "I guess I'm a character" Binks. It might have lost the 1945 pennant for Washington. They were playing their last game of the season and could tie the Tigers for the league lead. They were in a 3-3 tie with the A's at Philadelphia with two out in the last of the twelfth.

Then it happened. Ernie Kish sent a high fly into centerfield. Binks dashed gaily in for what appeared a routine catch. And then, as the ball descended, Binks covered up like a fighter going into his shell. He wasn't wearing his sun-glasses, and the glare was too much. The ball dropped safely, for two bases, and George Kell broke up the game with a single.

The Tigers thus needed to win only two of their remaining four games, which they did, and clinched the pennant.

In the Nats' dressing room after the game, Mickey Haefner looked sourly at Binks and cracked "they ought to fine you $5000." He was talking in terms of prospective World Series shares that had gone glimmering.

Binks' sin of forgetting his glasses was the more unpardonable because in the Nats' half of the inning when the sun suddenly showed, Center Fielder Sam Chapman held up the game to send to the dugout for his own sun-glasses.

BUT the Nats were never surprised at anything that happened to Binks. Just before his Shibe Park maneuver he inadvertently lost 'em a game in Boston when he was at bat with Cecil Travis on third with the tying run. On the next pitch, Travis set sail for home and was out when Binks didn't take his bat off his shoulder.

"What happened?" asked Binks, later.

"You gave me the sign for the squeeze," said the thunderstruck Travis.

Manager Ossie Bluege flared up, agreeing with Travis that Binks had given the squeeze sign.

But Binks was stubborn in maintaining his innocence. "How could I give him the squeeze sign," he asked, "when I don't know it myself."

Binks' inability to learn signs was well-known by the Nats. It's a fact that after he once hit a home run, he avoided Manager Bluege like a leper and didn't return to the bench after crossing the plate. Joe Kuhel had told him "Bluege's sore. He gave you the sign to bunt on that pitch." Binks believed it.

ELMER SMITH, the Pirates' catcher, was almost a goat in the 1925 World Series with the Nats. He forgot about the rule that a batter can take as many bases as he can get on a wild fourth ball. After a fourth ball to Muddy Ruel sailed over Smith's head, the catcher, without turning around, merely stuck his hand out toward the umpire, expecting to get another ball. He got nothing, the ball still being in play, and Ruel took two bases on his walk.

When Lefty Gomez pulled his most famous skull, it wasn't a total loss. He contrived to get some fun out of it. The A's had a man on third against Gomez when Mule Haas laid down a squeeze bunt. Lefty grabbed the ball up and noted he was too late for a play at home. Looking toward first, he saw that would be a late play too.

So for no reason at all, Gomez whirled and threw the ball to an amazed Tony Lazzeri at second base.

"What's the idea," said Lazzeri, "there's no play here."

Gomez shrugged his shoulders. "I know it," he told Lazzeri. "I didn't know what to do with the ball so I threw it to you. They all tell me you're supposed to be the brains of this club."

Hippenstiel Upsets Burrows, Gains Finals

Mrs. Rurac Wins, Plays For Title

Capt. Robin Hippenstiel upset top-seeded Hal Burrows of Charlottesville, Va., 6—4, 6—4, yesterday and gained the final round of the Middle Atlantic Tennis Championships at Kenwood Country Club.

Burrows was highly erratic off his backhand side, netting the ball consistently. Both men followed their powerful services to the net with Burrows putting away the greater margin of volleys.

The first set consisted of an exchange of service breaks for five games before Hippenstiel won his own to climax the set at 6-4.

Delayed Defeat

Burrows, Virginia University's first ranked player, managed to delay his ultimate defeat for one game in the second set, holding his serve while he was down 5-3 in games. Then Hippenstiel won his serve to take the crucial tenth game, the set, and the match.

Hippenstiel will face his Air Force Leech Cup teammate, Lieut. Charley Oliver, this afternoon at 3 in the final round. The match will be broadcast over WBCC by Kenwood Pro Jack Boucher.

Lefty Charley Oliver fought his way to the finals by an overwhelming defeat of Miami University star, Tony Vincent, from Elmhurst, N. Y., 6—0, 6—1. Oliver forced the issue all the way, allowing fourth seeded Vincent to score only three points in the first set and 15 during the entire match.

Today's finals encounter will be reminiscent of last week's U. S. Air Force championships when Oliver downed Hippenstiel in straight sets, 6—3, 6—0, 6—2, for the title.

Mrs. Rurac Wins

In the feature Hippenstiel-Burrows thriller, the captain outpointed his husky opponent 68—53.

Romanian champion Magda Rurac continued to the finals with a quick 6—1, 6—3 win over Washington's Willie Herbert. Thus far in the tournament Mrs. Rurac has lost only 8 out of 56 games, with Mrs. Herbert winning half of them.

Mrs. Rurac's finals opponent today at 2 will be defending Champion Ann Gray, who defeated Charlotte Decker in the semis, 8—6, 6—2.

Welsh, Lynch Lose

In the men's doubles division, the third-seeded team of Alphonso Smith and Davey Johnsen upset top-ranked Barney Welsh and Hugh Lynch, 6—0, 2—6, 7—5. Welsh and Lynch showed definite signs of wear after Barney lost his serve and the rubber set went to deuce. In the twelfth and final game the losers only managed to score one point.

In the ladies' doubles, Magda Rurac teamed with Frances Barry to register a 7—5, 3—6, 6—0 quarterfinal over Barbara Scarlett and Adrienne Ayares, the Baltimore duet, and Marion Ausness and Dorothy Estes whipped Ann Gray and Charlotte Decker, 6—3, 2—6, 6—3.

In this afternoon's doubles finals starting at 4, Ausness and Estes are pitted against Rurac and Barry in the women's division, and Smith and Johnsen against Hippenstiel and Oliver, who beat Jim Thacker and Don Leavens, 7—5, 7—5 in the men's doubles.

Hamilton, Harbert Beat Snead, Metz

Toledo, Ohio, July 23 (AP).—Melvin (Chick) Harbert and Bob Hamilton had a strangle hold today on the top prize of $4000 with two rounds to go in the $15,000 Inverness four-ball matches.

Harbert, the game's longest hitter, and former PGA Champion Hamilton won two matches today to zoom into a commanding lead with plus 14, an edge of 9 over their nearest foes in the 16-man eight-pair battle of birdies.

The surprise leaders won a 4-up victory over Sam Snead and Dick Metz this morning, and then came back this afternoon with a 29—31—60, an 11-under-par tournament record equaling score, to snatch a 6-up decision over E. J. (Dutch) Harrison and Jim Turnesa.

Stranahan Steals Show

However, Amateur Frank Stranahan stole today's show. The youngster, first simon pure ever to play in the event, paired with Jimmy Demaret to grab two matches, each by a 3-up margin. The pair opened today's play tied for last with Freddie Haas and Dave Douglas, and downed those rivals in the morning round.

In the afternoon, Demaret-Stranahan clashed with Lloyd Mangrum, former National Open champ, and Johnny Palmer. Stranahan promptly took charge and turned in seven birdies and an eagle on his own account for the finest one-man score in the 12-year tournament history. Demaret contributed one birdie, and the result was a score of 61 and a 3-up victory.

Harbert and Hamilton have won four of their five matches, and have ripped strokes off every hole on the course. They've scattered 38 birdies and a pair of eagles over the entire layout and have a long lead in the race for the $300 prize for the most sub-par holes. They're tied with Mangrum-Palmer at 60 for another $300 for low score for a round.

Meet Heafner, Alexander

Clayton Heafner and Skip Alexander meet the leaders in tomorrow's first match, and the tournament probably hinges on that clash. Heafner-Alexander are in second place, nine points back of the top team, and need a 5-up victory to go out front.

Under the Inverness scoring system a team gets a plus equal to the number of holes it finishes ahead of a foe, and the loser gets a corresponding minus.

The twelfth Inverness classic winds up Sunday with two more matches. The winners get $4000, and then the prizes drop to $2200, $1800, $1400, $1300, $1200, $1100 and $1000—an arrangement which allows the last placers a slight fee of $125 each per day, plus expenses.

FIFTH ROUND

Snead-Metz (33, 33—66, even with Middlecoff-Ferrier (32, 34—66); Demaret-Stranahan (30, 31—61), 3 up over Mangrum-Palmer (32, 32—64); Haas-Douglas (33, 34—67), even with Heafner-Alexander (33, 34—67); Hamilton-Harbert (29, 31—60), 6 up over Harrison-Turnesa (32, 34—66).

FIFTH ROUND STANDINGS

	Points	Birdies	Under Par
Hamilton-Harbert	+14	42	41
Heafner-Alexander	+5	33	32

Magda Thanks Miss Betz

Women's Net Star Fled Romania Via Wimbledon Tourney

By Jules Loh

MAGDA RURAC parlayed a tennis victory over Pauline Betz two years ago into a passport out of Communist-dominated Romania.

And today she plays in the finals of the Middle Atlantic Tennis Championships—all because she beat a world champion.

In 1947 Mary Magdalene Rurac was the best woman player in Europe, and seventh best in the world. Undefeated in 10 years of competition in Romania, she only lost two sets in match play. And from 1940-47 Magda never lost a European tournament.

Her record sent her to the swank Monte Carlo Country Club's Eastern tournament on the French Riviera where a third round victory over Miss Betz, Saturday, April 5, 1947, earned for her a new lease on life.

So overwhelmed was the tennis world when lithe, little Mrs. Rurac came from behind to down the American and Wimbledon titlist, 4—6, 8—6, 6—4, that she received invitations to play in England's Wimbledon tourney and in the United States.

The Red-controlled Romanian Tennis Association consented to let her go to England, but refused to allow her husband, Vinicus, who was Romania's best male player, to accompany her as as they had planned. Consequently, Magda refused to go unless "Vini" could go, too. Finally the officials relented and the two of them set out for England, but were assigned so-called bodyguards who watched their every move. That was the Rurac family's last look at Romania.

ONCE IN ENGLAND, they obtained visas to the United States from friends in the American Embassy, and got reservations on a plane bound for the United States. They shook their bodyguards by going from the court,

Win Over Pauline 2 Years Ago Led To United States

where they were both playing a match, directly to their hotel and then to the airport. But don't think it wasn't risky. "We were both shaking and trembling," said Magda in her best broken English.

They arrived in New York on July 31, 1947, and took up residence in San Francisco, where tennis enthusiasm is greatest. Immediately Magda embarked on a tour of nearly every important clay and grass court United States tournament. She appeared at Easthampton, Allentown, Tampa, Palm Beach, Miami, and even Toronto and Bermuda.

She won the National Clay Courts crown for the second time last Sunday, and prior to that annexed the Cincinnati Tri-State title. Although Magda has not been in the U. S. long enough to acquire an amateur rating, she has advanced as far as the quarterfinals in the Nationals at Forest Hills both in '47 and '48, which would put her among the top four women in the country.

MAGDA HAS NO desire to return to Romania. She learned through relatives that the Reds have confiscated her property, and with it more than a hundred tennis trophies, contrary to the reports of the Romanian Government that they would welcome her back any time.

However, she took with her her most treasured prize, a 200-gram solid gold trophy given her by Gustavus V, the remarkable 91-year-old tennis-playing King of Sweden.

Two weeks ago tomorrow Magda will have celebrated her thirtieth birthday. She regrets the six years of tennis she lost during the war and says that she would be much better now if it weren't for that. A statement which is hard to believe.

Magda likes it here. She sums up her feelings for America simply; "I wish I were born here."

Bogley Tops Entries

Kalamazoo, Mich., July 23 (AP).—Gil Bogley, National junior tennis champion from Chevy Chase, Md., tops a record field of 167 entries in the Western junior and boys' tennis tournament which gets under way at Kalamazoo College's Stowe courts Sunday.

took third on the play. On the first pitch to Buddy Lewis, who cracked out a double in the fifth and had driven two long flies to the outfield on other attempts, the Nats put on the double steal. While Coan was being run down between first and second, Yost stood fast at third. All of a sudden he broke for home, but was nabbed by Boudreau before he had taken five steps.

Hittle, who was tagged with his fourth defeat, started the eighth impressively by fanning Feller. There his mastery over the Indians halted. He walked Mitchell and Tucker singled the Tribe leftfielder to third. Vernon cracked a line triple to left-center to score them both and drive Hittle out. Al Gettel moved in and, amazingly enough, held the Indians.

The Nats vaulted into a 2-0 lead in the fifth on a double by Lewis, the first hit off Feller; another double by Eddie Robinson, Sam Dente's fly and Joe Haynes' single

IN SHORT—Robinson's double was at first ruled an error by Kennedy who backed up against the wall and made a leaping attempt to snag the ball, but missed . . . later, when the Indians had won, the charitable official scorer, ruled it a hit . . . Kennedy, hitting .211 when the series opened yesterday, has cracked out six straight hits against Nat pitching the last two days . . . Kennedy reached over the fence in right to rob Lewis of a 375-foot homer in the seventh. . . . Bob Lemon Cleveland's 11-game winner, faces Mickey Harris in the first game of tomorrow's twin bill with Gene Bearden slated to oppose any hurler the Nats can produce in the nightcap.

Aussies Gain Davis Cup Zone Finals

Montreal, July 23 (U.P.).—Australia advanced to the final round of the North American zone Davis Cup eliminations today by completing an expected 4 to 1 victory over Canada as Frank Sedgeman and Billy Sidwell won the last two singles matches.

Sedgman, 21-year-old Aussie singles champion, showed one of the best services and finest all-around games seen in Canada in several years when he beat Brendan Macken of Canada, 6—2, 6—2, 6—0, in today's first match to clinch the Australian triumph.

Sidwell then won the anticlimactic final match from 19-year-old Lorne Main, considered one of Canada's best young tennis prospects, 8—6, 6—4, 4—6, 6—1.

By the semifinal win over Canada, the Aussies qualified to meet Mexico in the North American zone finals next week in Wilmington, Del. The winner of that series will play the winner of the European zone finals between France and Italy for the right to challenge the United States for the Davis Cup.

Sedgman emerged as the star of the Aussie victory over Canada, winning two singles matches and teaming with the veteran ace Jack Bromwich to win the doubles. Bromwich predicted after today's matches that Sedgman will one day become tennis' world champion.

Angling Around . . .

Too Many Boats (2) Bring Law Down on Seine Fishers

By Ralph Murdock

BY FAILING to heed the warnings of the Maryland Department of Tidewater Fisheries 15 haul-seiners were hauled into a magistrate's court and fined the maximum $100 each.

Murdock

They were charged with using two motor boats instead of one to haul their seines. Some of the arrests were made at Plum Point on Chesapeake Bay.

A number of the offenders were commercial fishermen from Tilghman's Island. The watermen were nabbed by the enforcement division of the Tidewater Fisheries Commission.

A drive against the illegal operation of seines has been in progress for several weeks. Numerous complaints have been lodged by the anglers and sportsmen. Most of these hauls were concentrated on hardheads, some of these catches aggregating more than 20,000 pounds.

Anglers who frequent the blue waters of the Gulfstream for sport fishing will be surprised to learn that this beautiful body of warm water has moved inshore at several points on the Atlantic seaboard.

At Nag's Head the Gulfstream is now only three miles from shore. Point Pleasant, N. J., is another spot where the blue water has moved in. Reason for the shift is unexplained.

Doc Ayers, at Turner's Arena, received a postcard from Perry Behrens, local angler, who is vacationing at Atlantic City. Perry writes that he made a fishing trip 12 miles off shore and had the good luck of hauling in 35 porgies that averaged two pounds each.

Carl Argent and his wife, Janet, and Eugene Roney and his wife, Lois, caught 18 hardheads while fishing with Captain Boosie off Franklin Manor. They drifted with frozen shrimp for bait. They fished from the "Vicky Ann." The quartet hails from Largo, Md.

Carl said, "Of course 18 might not sound like a lot of hardheads, but we had a lot of fun and they were all big ones." The fish were taken in 2½ hours.

Here's a trio who caught the same number of fish at the same location—J. Aloysius Clarke, Buddy Bennett and Walton Duckett. They used a different method. Instead of drifting they still-fished in shoal water. The depth where the fish were taken was 3½ feet of water and only 150 yards from shore.

One of the Nation's leading manufacturers of fishing equipment, Richard H. Balch, has voiced strong opposition to the Dingell bill, to levy a tax on sport fishing equipment, now pending before Congress.

The tax would be an unfair burden upon 18 million licensed anglers in the United States, Balch contended. He argued that large fish corporations and commercial fishermen should also share in the tax assessment. The licensed anglers have paid eight million dollars for the privilege of fishing, he pointed out.

Post Industrial League Ends With 4 Games

The Washington Post-Industrial Baseball League will wind up this week with four games, all on the Ellipse.

The Heurich Brewers, pressing Cameo Furniture for the second-half title, are involved in three of the contests while Cameo faces Naiman in its only outing.

THIS WEEKS SCHEDULE
Monday—Naiman vs. Heurich.
Tuesday—Heurich vs. ThriFty.
Wednesday—Heurich vs. Sunnybrook.
Thursday—Cameo vs. Naiman.

Virginia Reported Rejecting NCAA Parity Code

Richmond, Va., July 23 (AP).—The Richmond News Leader said today it had learned from "usually reliable sources" that the University of Virginia "is going to reject the NCAA purity code."

The News Leader said the official university stand has been communicated to Clarence P. Houston of Tufts College, chairman of the NCAA compliance committee.

Blows Lead

Joe Kuhel Even Has Pitching Woes in Family—Son Loses

CLEVELAND, July 23.—Joe Kuhel's pitching problems aren't restricted to the Nats. His 11-year-old son, Joey, jr., blew a five-run lead in the seventh inning and lost the ball game for the All-Stars in a Wisconsin summer camp league . . . Ed Kiely, publicity director for the Pittsburgh Steelers, is still chuckling over the reply to a questionnaire he received from a rookie tackle. He listed his nationality as a Texan . . . At the Cleveland baseball park fans just don't simply get up and take the customary seventh-inning stretch. Led by President Bill Veeck and the Cleveland sportswriters, they stand and sing, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" . . . stretching is permitted only after this ritual is performed . . . Larry Doby has been fined $50 for his ill-timed attempted steal of home against the Yankees Wednesday night and if he tries it again he'll be paid strictly on a sliding scale, manager Lou Boudreau intimated.

AUGUST 1 is M-Day at Maryland, the day when head Coach Jim Tatum mobilizes his football assistants and discusses plans he's been discussing with them all summer long . . . According to Catcher Jake Early, the Nats were ready to call up Bobo Newsom and use him as relief pitcher until Bobo decided to up and leave the Chattanooga club . . . The league-leading Yankees and second-place Indians have drawn 621,104 fams to their 14 games this season . . . Generally speaking, the high-salaried baseball players are not enjoying good seasons. Stan Musial, the Cardinals' $50,000 a year outfielder isn't hitting .300; Bob Feller, Cleveland's $70,000 pitcher, had won only six games going into today's tiff with the Nats; Hal Newhouser, Detroit's $50,000 lefthander, has been kayoed in his last five starts; and Lou Boudreau, the Indians' $75,000 playing-manager, is batting only .280 and has been forced to move from shortstop.

PITCHER ALLAN Gettel iis the Nats' leading home run producer. He's served up 14 already, three more than Clyde Vollmer has hit . . . Umpire Bill McGowan, who's working the current Cleveland-Washington series, will take Joe DiMaggio as a hitter over Ted Williams any day. . . . "I'm certain that I've never worked a Yankee ball game but what DiMag hasn't driven in either the tieing or winning run," McGowan was saying this morning. "You on my side" . . . McGowan rates Cece Travis as the nicest of all the players. "He wouldn't say a word if you called a strike on him on a ball that came up to the plate on three bounces" . . . Having seen Mickey Harris blow leads of from 1-4 runs in the eighth and ninth innings in his last three starts, Manager Kuhel has decided to yank him "even if he has an eight-run lead and the first two batters get on base" . . .

Locke Terms Row 'Silly and a Shame'

Bobby Says He Never Has to Play in U. S.

Leeds, England, July 23 (AP).—Bobby Locke of South Africa, big money winner in United States golf tournaments, said tonight "I don't ever have to play golf in America again."

Locke, who won the British Open championship earlier this month, termed reported efforts in America to bar him from the $55,000 Tam O'Shanter golf tourney opening in Chicago August 6 as "silly and a disgrace."

"I'm surprised," Locke said when told that George May, Tam O'Shanter promoter, was quoted as saying he thought Locke should be barred from United States tournaments by the Professional Golfers Association.

"That contradicts the statement May made earlier this week," the South African explained. "Then he said 'Bobby Locke always will be welcome to the Tam O'Shanter.'

"It's silly," Locke added. "I wish they'd make up their minds whether to let me play or not. I have my ticket to fly to New York Thursday.

"I'll send May a cable and ask him if my entry has been accepted. If it isn't, I'm going to stay right here. I don't ever have to play golf in America if that's the way it's going to be."

Locke has been the center of various disputes for the past two years. In 1947 he was invited to compete in the United States pro golf tourney but he was excluded from the 1948 and 1949 meets because he no longer was a casual visitor in the opinion of the PGA official.

He flew to England late in June and won the British open earlier this month. After taking that title he cabled various promoters cancelling contracts to appear in United States meets.

Locke insists he cabled immediately after winning the title but the promoters say he waited a week, during which time they spent considerable money in advertising his appearance.

Plans to Query May On Tam O'Shanter

Locke blamed all his troubles on the operators of the Inverness four-ball tournament at Toledo, Ohio.

"I sent a telegram to Inverness telling them of my obligation to stay here a few weeks after winning the British Open," Locke said. "I never received a reply. That Toledo crowd is being ridiculous."

In a parting shot at the Inverness tournament, Locke said:

"They never need invite me again. I'll never play there again."

Blue Falcon Wins

Cumberland 'Double' Pays $569

Race Track, Cumberland., Md., July 23.—Some 7500 fans turned out for the weekend program of Cumberland Fair Association here this afternoon under ideal weather conditions. They were treated to a double payoff of $569.20 and then saw Ken Wheeler's Blue Falcon score a thrilling victory in the running of the 6½ furlong Harry Manly Memorial Trophy race.

Blue Falcon, an invader from Rhode Island, drove to a length victory over the favored Mrs. E. B. Lee's Maxim Miss. Only a neck back came the fast closing P. A. Rothfuss' Flicka Foot, a half length in front of Mrs. J. D. Coleman's Certified.

The gray gelded son of Mahoud-Topflight, cleverly handled by the veteran Johnny Tammaro who was riding his seventh winner in five days, paid $10.80 and raced the distance in 1:23 3/5, the fastest time of the meeting.

Fortunate holders of the 8 and 1 tickets in the daily double collected to the tune of $569.20 for each copy.

W. F. Parks; Foxler started off the day's program by winning the six and a half furlong race and returned $17.20. If Foxler's victory upset the dope, then Mrs. S. A. Cooper, jr.'s, Little Hussy came along and completely shattered all form in the six and a half furlong second event.

Little Hussy, which hadn't raced since 1948, right over this Fairgo course, paid $88.20, the longest price of the meeting.

Foxler, ridden by R. D. Scott, moved up steadily on the backstretch, and finally collared the pace-setting H. Scott's Soulful in the stretch to win by three fourths of a length at the finish. Soulful held on to second, two lengths in front of Mrs. M. V. Reynolds' Alice Thomas.

Edith Lower Tennis Loser

The D. C. Recreation Department's annual tennis tournaments for men and women started yesterday at the Rock Creek courts, 16th and Kennedy sts. nw., with all favorites surviving. The majority of matches were decided in straight sets with one notable exception.

Edith Lower was that exception, losing to her youthful opponent, Agnes Green, 8—6, 6—8, 6—4. The two played three hours of blistering tennis.

The committee has requested all who have entered the doubles, both men and women, to report to the courts at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Today's women's singles pairings: 9 a. m.—Glenore Hall vs. Betty Clark; 10—Clara Bias vs. Lois Deitmeier, Ann Gray vs. Luanna Martin, Agnes Green vs. Ann Fennessey; 11—Carol Mortimer vs. Mary Ellen Cunningham; noon—Sara Moore vs. Margaret Graham, Sosie Girgosian vs. winner Glenore Hall-Betty Clark; 2 p. m.—Carrie Root vs. winner Ann Fennessey-Agnes Green; 5—Margaret Duff vs. Louise Phillips.

Today's men's singles pairings: 9 a. m.—Merle Gulick vs. Leon Strauss; 10—Steve Curlin vs. Ager Hebb, Charles Hackney, jr., vs. Dick Johnson, H. R. Horton vs. winner Zerega-M. Haller, Lawrence Middlekamp vs. C. H. Belser; 11—Lloyd Rie vs. W. M. King, Arnold Kotz vs. Russell Cooley, Gene Fry vs. Charles Price, George Herbert vs. Stan Levy, Lew Sims vs. Upton Guthery, Roger Spencer vs. John Addison, John Shipman vs. Frank Smith; noon—Charles Lo vs. Frank Mansen; 2 p. m.—Bill Bassett vs. winner Lew Sims-Upton Guthery.

Riled Fans Act Up Over No Refund

By John Chandler

New York, July 23 (AP).—Sun Bahram racked up a two-length victory today in the Saranac Handicap at Jamaica, after Shackleton refused to leave the starting gate and caused a boisterous demonstration by those among the crowd of 27,949 who had established him third choice in the betting.

It was a bitter seventy-fifth birthday present for James (Sunny Jim) Fitzsimmons, dean of American trainers who saddled Shackleton for the Belair Stud. Half a dozen customers were chased from the running track by police after the race was finished.

Sun Bahram, owned by Mrs. Eben H. Ellison, jr., and ridden smartly by Eddie Arcaro, charged from far back in a stretch drive to defeat Mrs. Alfred Robert's Eatontown by two lengths. Addison Stable's Arise was third.

Sun Bahram, second choice, toured the mile and one sixteenth in 1:45 and returned $7.90, $5.50 and $4.70 across the board.

An assistant starter attempted to get Shackleton into the gate half a dozen times. Each time the colt which won the $50,000 Dwyer Stakes recently backed out. Finally the horse was led in again, and as the starter climbed into the gate rigging, the doors were sprung. Shackleton backed out of the gate and refused to run.

Wine List, ridden by Ted Atkinson, was away on top, but midway of the backstretch Eatontown took over. Turning into the top of the stretch, Eatontown still led, with ThePincher second and Sun Bahram moving up fast on the outside.

After Sun Bahram and Arcaro made it home, some of those in the crowd who backed Shackleton started to shout and mill around the track.

Fitzsimmons, in whose honor a presentation of silver plate was arranged in the winners' circle, came out for pictures.

A total of $43,637 was bet on Shackleton—$27,706 of it to win.

Three Rings Scores Monmouth Upset

Oceanport, N. J., July 23 (AP).—Three Rings, 4-year-old Blue Larkspur-Circus Ring gelding owned by Mrs. E. L. Hopkins, made a show of his opponents while winning the sixth running of the $25,000 added Monmouth Handicap at Monmouth Park today.

Perfectly handled by Jockey Hedley Woodhouse, Three Rings followed the fast early pace set by Papa Redbird, willingly assumed command on the stretch turn to win by 2½ lengths.

Sanford Stud Farm's Round View, 1947 winner of this fixture, and only serious stretch contender today, was second before Al-Jo Stable's Splash, Papa Redbird fading to finish fourth. The favored Donor lacked his usual stretch dash, placing sixth in the eight-horse field of veteran handicap horses.

Capitals Win, 16-6

The Washington Capitols defeated the Shamrock Trucking Co., 16 to 6, yesterday on the Ellipse. Bob Mayberry and Harry Kallas led the winners with three hits each.

Cissel-Saxon Beats Cambridge

In the interdistrict American Legion baseball tournament, Cissel-Saxon Post of Silver Spring defeated Cambridge, Md., yesterday, 6 to 4, in the first of a two-of-three playoffs.

Although outhit, eight to seven, Cissel-Saxon capitalized on several timely base hits and two Cambridge errors to win. Ernie Clifford was the winning pitcher.

The second game of the series will be played at Silver Spring next Saturday.

128 Seek Junior Open Title at Congressional Wednesday

Links Finals Scheduled Saturday

By West McLean
Post Reporter

Washington plays host to its first major amateur golf championship since 1935 this week when the National Junior Amateur opens at Congressional.

The second annual USGA Junior championship recently attracted 417 entries, 128 of whom qualified in 38 sectional playoffs for the match play rounds at Congressional.

The youngsters will be allowed practice rounds at the 6618-yard course Monday and Tuesday, with the first 18-hole round scheduled for Wednesday. Thursday, Friday and Saturday will see two 18-hole matches each day with the semi-finals and finals on Saturday.

A consolation round will take place Thursday for those defeated in first-round matches. The consolation flight will be at medal play.

The Washington committee for the junior championships, under the chairmanship of Francis E. McArdle of Congressional, has arranged sight-seeing tours for the youngsters, who will be quartered at Georgetown University. Willie Turnesa, the amateur champion, will give the boys a talk on the rules and etiquette of the game and motion pictures have been arranged for their enjoyment.

The junior championship is open to male amateur golfers who have not reached their eighteenth birthday by July 30. This age limit disqualifies last year's champion, Dean Lind of Rockford, Ill. Lind won the inaugural last year over the University of Michigan course. He is now a freshman at Michigan and recently won the Chicago junior championship.

The champion will be invited to compete in the national amateur championship August 29-September 3 at Oak Hill Country Club, Pittsford, N. Y. He will be exempt from qualifying for the amateur championship.

This is the only national tournament in which the contestants are not required to have caddies. They are allowed to do their own caddying or have friends caddie for them, if they wish.

Some of the youngsters even go so far as to have their mothers caddie for them. Their caddies then become their most ardent rooters, naturally. Thus, they are assured of a good gallery at all times.

OUCH! MY LEG!—That's what Eddie Kazak, St. Louis Cardinals' third baseman, appears to be saying as he grabs his right leg with both hands just after it collapsed under him in a slide into second base. It happened in the second inning of the game yesterday with Brooklyn at Ebbetts Field. Dodger Second Baseman Jackie Robinson is covering the bag. The umpire is Art Gore while Dodger Pitcher Joe Hatten prepares to face Marty Marion, Cards' shortstop

Buck Worsham seems to be the man first in line for the Chevy Chase pro job. Worsham has been under consideration by Chevy Chase as a replacement for the late Bob Barnet. Buck's most serious competition for the job comes from Charlie Bassler and Johnnie Bass with Bobby Williams being given some consideration for the post.

The Mid-Atlantic section of the PGA will hold a business meeting at Manor Country Club tomorrow morning before the pro-amateur tournament at the Norbeck, Md. course . . . The WDGA holds the Times-Herald Cup Tourney Tuesday at Manor . . . Conestoga Club of Lancaster, Pa., meets East Potomac Club at the local publinx July 31.

The USGA replied to a query to the effect that a hole-in-one tournament is an official golf tournament and prizes must not exceed the $10,000 limit set for all amateur contests.

The Chicago Women's Golf Association recently appropriated $500 for the underwriting of the costs of textbooks of Evans Scholars studying at Northwestern University. The Western Golf Association, original sponsors of the Evans Scholarships to send deserving caddies to college, is spreading its ideas as far away as Columbia where it also presented its famous movie starring Bing Crosby "Honor Caddie."

Ocean City Track Opens On Monday

Special to The Washington Post.

Ocean City, Md., July 23.—Ocean Downs Raceway, Maryland's newest harness race track, opens its inaugural 20-night meeting Monday.

Thus the streamlined sulky sport, complete with arc lights and pari-mutuel trimmings, returns to the Eastern Shore area that's steeped in harness lore.

Many of the best trotters and pacers in the business have been bred and trained on the Delmarva Peninsula since before the turn of the century.

One thing, the cozy Ocean Downs plant is better prepared for its opening than either Rosecroft or Laurel were.

The grandstand accommodating 4500 and grounds have been in a state of readiness for more than two weeks.

Track operatives don't expect to handle nearly the business that the two tracks in the Washington area had. Chances are they'll be satisfied if the mutuel handle averages $125,000 nightly.

Ocean Downs is located five miles from this summer resort on Route 50. Most of the horses and drivers are moving right down from Laurel as are the racing officials.

Roadster Racing Back at Hybla

Roadster racing will be resumed next Sunday at Hybla Valley Speedway with a twilight program.

To beat the afternoon heat, starting time will be 6 p. m. Drivers from five States will compete against favorites from the Washington area including Carl Anderson, Chess Wilkins and Bob Nay.

Record Entry For Horse Show Today at Fairfax

A record number of exhibitors will compete in the 24 classes of the fifth annual horse show sponsored by the Animal Welfare League of Arlington at 11 a. m. today on the Fairfax (Va.) show ground.

Final awards for the year will be made in three classes. They include 2-year-olds suitable to become hunters, Virginia Horse Show Association's equitation class, and the Professional Horsemen's Association trophy.

Beverly Baker Wins Pennsylvania Tennis

Haverford, Pa., July 23 (AP).—Beverly Baker, 19-year-old Santa Monica, Calif., girl, today won the forty-ninth annual women's Pennsylvania and Eastern States tennis title with a 6—1, 6—2 victory over Baba Lewis of Boston.

In the men's singles, Victor Seixas, Philadelphia, bested Sam Match, San Francisco University senior and defending champion, 3—6, 6—3, 7—5, 1—6, 6—3 in the Pennsylvania State tennis semi-finals.

Seixas will meet Pancho Gonzales, Los Angeles, tomorrow for the State title.

Browns Grab Stevens, Dyer

D. C. Area Schoolboy Stars Scattered Over Wide Front

What Washington's former schoolboy athletes are doing:

The St. Louis Browns have gobbled up Outfielder Jimmy Stevens and First Baseman Teddy Dyer from the 1949 championship Eastern High team. Stevens has been shipped to Aberdeen, S. D., of the Northern League, and Dyer to Mayfield, Ky., of the Kitty League . . . Third Baseman George Reeden of Anacostia High has been signed by the Athletics and will get a Class D league assignment . . . Sam DiBlasi, the former Central High third baseman, converted into an outfielder by the Dodgers' Fort Worth farm in the Texas League, was reconverted into a pitcher last week. He worked two innings in relief in his debut and gave up two hits and no runs . . . Bill Kennedy, the Alexandria High lefthanded pitcher, who once worked for the Nats, won his fifth game, a five-hitter, 5-1, for Atlanta of the Southern Association the other day . . . Billy Garner and Jack Lartz, Roosevelt High's battery combination seven years ago are reunited on The Washington Post, Garner as a printer and Lartz as a photographer. Pitcher Garner had a three-year fling at minor league baseball. He was converted into a first baseman. He quit when the Giants failed to promote him after he hit .301 for Trenton, N. J., of the Interstate League last season . . . Garner's keeping his hand in as an outfielder on the D. C. Union Printers team . . . Nick Chanaka, Western's All-high first baseman of four year's ago, was hitting .298 for St. Cloud of the Wistonsin League when he was sidelined by a back injury. He's at Johns Hopkins for an examination . . . Glen McQuillan of nearby Stroudsburg, Va., and a D. C. resident for the past 15 years, is Baltimore's only .300 hitter. The veteran Orioles outfielder is swatting .317. Jersey City is reported after his services . . .

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Revival in Bullish Sentiment

A one-month advance in the stock market, a snapback in new home construction, strength in nonferrous metal prices, increased inquiries for textiles, and steady buying at department stores have produced an improvement in sentiment. The American economy which was falling apart in June somehow held together in July. Now people are asking the question, "Is recovery here?"

Livingston

The reversal in sentiment ought to put an end to the notion that America can talk itself into a depression. That idea emanates from as high up as the President's Council of Economic Advisers. It prevails among businessmen, too. Charles Luckman, president of Lever Brothers, last week told the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce that the country suffers from "jabberjitters" and threatens to "worry itself sick."

Yet we can no more talk ourselves into a depression today than we could talk ourselves out of the depression of 1929-33. After the stock market crash, declarations by Wall Street bankers that business was fundamentally sound or exhortations by the President of the United States to businessmen to proceed with new construction could not stay the downward tide. The country was bought up.

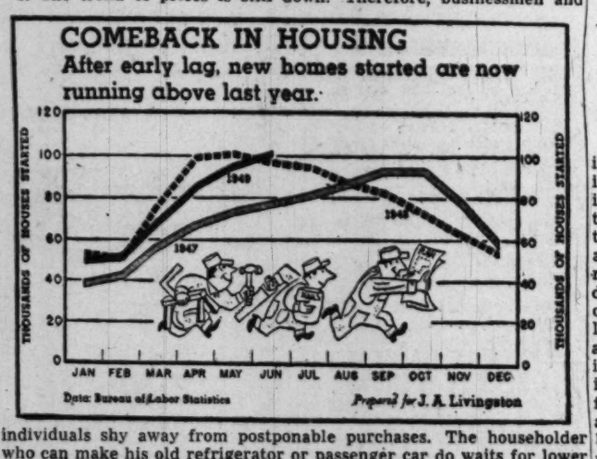
Today, as I see it, the underlying demand for goods and services is far too powerful to be dissipated by jabberwocky. The country is not bought up. And it's significant that gloom should lift at the very moment when the business statistics, notably production, hit a new low.

Short Interest Still High

Nevertheless, many people are still willing to bet, with cold cash, that the decline has further to go. On July 15, the short interest on the New York Stock Exchange, at 1,844,000 shares, was the highest since February 20, 1933. My semiannual consensus of economists showed that only 6 per cent expected the decline to end this year, 35 per cent estimated a turn might come between January and June, 1950. And 57 per cent—more than half—figured that the decline would persist beyond June, 1950.

The debits in the domestic economy are still numerous, as follows:

1. The trend of prices is still down. Therefore, businessmen and individuals shy away from postponable purchases. The householder who can make his old refrigerator or passenger car do waits for lower prices. The industrialist, in the market for machinery or a new plant, holds off for lower bids.



2. Unemployment is still rising. That decreases demand for goods and services in urban areas, threatens a so-called downward spiral. As incomes drop, people buy less; as they buy less, unemployment rises some more, incomes decline further, and so along.

3. The farmer isn't as flush as he used to be. Agricultural prices are off 18 per cent from the January, 1948, peak. Production expenses are down much less. Net farm income is figured at 10 per cent under 1948. Obviously, that makes farmers less willing to make large capital improvements. such as installation of electricity or telephones, improvement of homes, etc.

4. The most urgent pent-up demands for refrigerators, washing machines, radios, vacuum cleaners have been met. Prices are being cut. Current buying is well under peak capacity in most consumers durable goods industries.

5. Ditto for plant expansion and industrial machinery. The Securities and Exchange Commission estimates expenditures on new plant and equipment in the third quarter at $4,630,000,000, or only 4 per cent below the same three months of '48. The year's work has been far beyond expectations. Thus second-quarter plant expansion was the same as last year. Yet, in making their estimates in February, businessmen figured on a 14 per cent drop.

6. United States exports of goods, notably to England, are bound to decline, as the shortage of dollars becomes aggravated. However, ERP outlays are a continuing prop to United States sales abroad, guarantee against any foreign trade collapse such as occurred in 1930-31.

Russia, Truman and Housing

And here's the credit side of the ledger:

1. International tensions have lessened. Fear of war no longer is everpresent. The airlift victory in the Battle of Berlin and the four-power meeting in Paris at least suggest that eventual accord—slow and bitter—may be achieved between the powers of the West and the East. In two or three years, that might lead to a reduction in armaments, hence in taxes. This is a long-term influence of great force.

2. President Truman's semiannual message was enheartening. At last, he accepted the facts of deflation and has abandoned his demand for a four-billion-dollar tax boost. At the same time, he set in motion an anti-inflation program in case it's needed.

3. Construction outlays have continued at levels equal to a year ago. Big surprise is residential building. After a slow start, it's running ahead of a year ago (see chart). Business outlays, as previously mentioned, are also at an unexpectedly high level.

4. The decline in prices has not resulted in a wave of cancellations—as in 1937-38, 1929-33, or 1920-21. That's because businessmen have not indulged in overspeculation. All the talk of a depression, far from being a bane, was a boon. It induced caution.

5. The drop in industrial production has already gone pretty far and pretty fast. The Federal Reserve Board index, which registered 195 in October and November, registered 169 in June. And this month, what with vacations, it is probably down to 165 or less. In some lines, notably textiles, consumption is outrunning production.

6. Merchants have cut prices fast. As a result, total sales are not much below a year ago in dollar value. And physical volume is actually higher. Monthly reports on retail sales tend to be misleading. They imply "real" purchases are off. It's noteworthy, incidentally, that business failures have begun to decline. Manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers presumably were in pretty good shape to bear a price drop, in spite of the many GI newcomers to business.

7. Credit is plentiful. Corporations are in fine financial shape. Business men are paying off loans easily. The Reserve Board has taken steps to ease the money market. And savings of individuals are increasing rapidly. This last implies that a resumption of buying of consumer goods of all types is not far off. When savings accumulate, people become freer with their money, figuring they have plenty for a "rainy day."

8. The economy is not prey to haphazard emotional forces of laissez-faire. Unemployment insurance supplies income, hence purchasing power, to persons laid off. Support prices prevent a panic in farm commodities. And Federal and State and local government projects are expanding after the long suspension of public work during the war. And the Government is hep to the technique of deficit financing to prop buying power.

But more than that, we have great unfulfilled wants—in housing, in household improvements (air conditioning, refrigeration, electricity, plumbing, washing machines, dishwashers, etc.). Old cars still dominate the highways and will be replaced. And the highways themselves, are obsolete. As I visualize it, we are in the readjustment stages of a postwar period akin to the 1920s. Any business decline is bound to yield to the larger, mass forces pushing production and employment upward.

Canadian Trade Deficit With U. S. Exceeds '48

Ottawa, July 23 (AP).—Canada's trade deficit with the United States for the first five months of this year is higher than the same period last year but it still doesn't approach the 1947 figures.

The Bureau of Statistics reported the aggregate deficit with the United States in trade for the first five months was 247 million dollars, compared with a deficit of $184,600,000 in the five-month period of 1948 and $397,500,000 in 1947.

The bureau said the chief reason for a greater deficit this year was the increase in exports from the United States.

Clearing House Group To Hear Justice Laws

Bolitha J. Laws, chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, will address the meeting of the Regional Clearing House Association of Loudoun, Fauquier and Prince William Counties at the Leesburg Inn, Leesburg, Va., at 6:30 p. m. Tuesday.

C. & O. Net Expands

Cleveland, July 23 (AP).—The Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. reported net income for the first six months of $15,604,928, or $1.95 a share. This compares with $14,004,559, or $1.75 a share, for the same period last year.

D. C. Remains On Plus Side In Store Sales

By S. Oliver Goodman

Washington remains a bright spot in an otherwise fading national retail sales picture, latest reports from the Federal Reserve Board indicate.

For the week ended July 16, local department store sales advanced 6 per cent above the same 1948 week while a 7 per cent increase was recorded in the four weeks ended July 16.

Buying to beat the sales tax, effective August 1, is a new factor in the sales gain. Extent of this type of purchasing is difficult to measure, but in some informed quarters was believed to be substantial.

Aggressive local promotion of seasonal merchandise is another reason, with stable Government payrolls always the principal underlying factor.

Elsewhere in the Nation, the Federal Reserve Board noted that every reporting district, with the exception of the Richmond area, showed sales declines in the week ended July 16. The Richmond district was up 2 per cent.

Percentage of declines in the other districts were listed as: Boston, 8; New York, 11; Philadelphia, 6; Cleveland, 10; Atlanta, 6; Chicago, 12; St. Louis, 13; Kansas City, none; Dallas, 7, and San Francisco, 7.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: Troy M. Rodlun, advertising consultant, has moved to new quarters at 1832 M st. nw. . . . James H. Sharp has been elected a director of Merck & Co., manufacturing chemists. He is a vice president and director of the Grace National Bank, New York.

B. & L. LEAGUE: The 27 saving and loan associations comprising the District of Columbia Building and Loan League reported total resources of $354,767,602 at the close of business June 30, an analysis, made public yesterday, revealed. This total is eight million dollars greater than a year previously. According to the report, local savers boosted their savings accounts by 26 million dollars, making it possible for the home-lending institutions to reduce their loans from the Federal Home Loan Bank and other refinancing institutions by more than half. Last year, nearly 22 million dollars had been borrowed to assist home owners in their financing problems.

FASTER-GROWING: Cooking habits soon may change to keep pace with improvements in chicken growing. Declared Howard C. Pierce, research director for the A. & P. food chain: "Birds now are being produced that weigh four or five pounds instead of two or three pounds at 12 weeks of age. It has been the custom to classify chickens by weight: broilers weighed up to 2½ pounds; fryers up to 3½ and anything over that was a roaster. But with the newly-developed chicken, a bird weighing as much as an old-time roaster can be young and tender enough to be broiled or fried to suit the individual taste."

DIVIDENDS: Publicly reported cash dividend payments by corporations in May were 14 per cent higher than in May, 1948, the Commerce Department said. It estimated the total for last May at $193,300,000. These payments for the three months ended May 31 totaled $1,371,300,000 and were 10 per cent above the corresponding period of 1948. The figures were evidence that corporations are paying out a greater proportion of their earnings to stockholders this year than last when larger sums were being retained for expansion. The increase in dividend payments is at a time when a decline in earnings from last year has been reported by many lines of business.

BUILDING: The dollar volume of construction contracts in States east of the Rocky Mountains totaled $4,467,676,000 in the first half of this year, a drop of 6 per cent from a year ago, F. W. Dodge Corp reported. The total was the highest first half volume on record, excepting the first half of 1948. Nonresidential contracts dropped 6 per cent to $1,744,180,000, Dodge reported. Residential awards declined 11 per cent to $1,624,799,000, while public works and utilities totaled $1,098,697,000, a gain of 1 per cent over the first half last year.

EARNINGS: Studebaker Corp. and subsidiaries report consolidated net income of $11,724,931, equal to $4.97 a share, for the six months ended June 30. This compared with $8,126,553, or $3.45 a share, for the first half of last year. Net sales in the 1949 half totaled $238,217,658, against $184,174,751 for the like 1948 months. The company sold 151,212 passenger cars and trucks in the six months ended June 30, compared with 114,338 in the first half of 1948. Net profit in the June quarter this year was $6,517,131, or $2.76 a share, compared with $3,874,706, or $1.65 a share in 1948. Other earnings reports follow:

Britain Needs Great Statesman To Fight Battle of the Pound

By J. A. Livingston

WHAT BRITAIN NEEDS is a great man who'll fight the Battle of Pound the way Churchill fought the Battle of Britain, a statesman who'll come to grips with Britain's postwar poverty. Then, and not till then, will Britain emerge from economic bankruptcy.

Britain must free itself from government controls which now rule the way men work, eat, sleep, play, and travel. At the same time, Britain must set the pound free to find its real value relative to the dollar, the franc, and the peso.

Through devaluation and decontrol, pressures of world markets would force British manufacturers, workers, and consumers to reduce consumption according to their pocketbooks.

The British would have to pay more for American wheat, cotton, machinery, etc. — not only in pounds, but in man-hours of work. Simultaneously, Americans and other foreigners would be able to acquire pounds for fewer dollars or francs. Foreigners would be more inclined to buy British goods. This would serve Britain's dual economic need: To decrease imports and increase exports.

TOKEN DEVALUATION, which so many persons have been talking about—a devaluation in which Britain drops the pound but keeps the economic controls—would be valueless. Quotas, subsidies, and ultimately rationing and price controls must go. How else can British labor and techonology be brought into competition with world labor and technology?

The risks are unmistakable. Prices would rise sharply. The standard of living would fall undeniably. Workers already frustrated by their inability to spend their wages (moviegoing, pubvisiting, recreational outlays of all kinds have soared) would be more frustrated. The market place—the price rise—would filch away weekly savings. Would the labor leaders accept it? Could they persuade the workers to take it?

The alternative is further insulation and regulation. Today each new stringency is met with some expedient. Rules pile atop rules. British trade tends toward barter with high-cost, soft-currency countries, because only such countries are willing to pay British prices; they don't have dollars, either. So, multilateral and competitve trade, which the United States hopes to revivify through ERP, diminishes. The concept of buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest becomes as heretical economically as free religious thought was heretical politically in seventeenth century English. Inevitably, as then, strong men would flee.

ONLY A LABOR government can chance devaluation and decontrol. A Conservative government would be accused of the speedup and stretchout, of inhumanity to fellow men in behalf of private profit. Strikes, shirking and slowdowns, if not worse, would be probable. But Attlee and Cripps, as the representatives of the trade unions, might succeed in administering the purgative.

The London economist is optimistic, saying: "The adjustments that the British economy requires are not large. Once the decision is taken to meet the challenge of competitive efficiency, the British people will be surprised to discover how comparatively little of what they now dread will be needed to get them back on an even keel."

Perhaps the plan to cut United States purchases by 25 per cent—even though it's still another regulation—may be a first step toward solution. If Britain can get its imports down low enough, so that it won't be continually running a dollar deficit, then the cabinet could make a move toward partial if not total devaluation.

THERE IS A BLESSING in prices set in world markets. The marketplace allocates resources in accord with people's desires and their capacity to pay. No Minister of Supply is constantly saying to manufacturers, workers and consumers, "You can have this, but not that." Moreover, the price standard is indifferent to the next election.

If Attlee and Cripps are to make their peace with history, they must dare the wrath of 50 million people who have been battened by controls and a Labor Government against postwar reality. A hard decision. Far harder than writing a series of articles suggesting it. Attlee and Cripps face the consequences of their deeds, which inevitably tempers decisions and buckles the wills of men.

Yet, have they a choice? Punch, Britain's fun-making magazine, turned soberly prophetic in a recent cartoon. A giant wolf, labeled Disaster, drools over a flock of unmindful pygmy sheep. The sheep are labeled More Food, More Leisure, More Subsidies, More Money, More State Control, More Luxuries.

Inevitably, error will out.

(This is the last of three articles on the Battle of the Pound)

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 23 (AP).—A buying movement which gathered speed as the day wore on left wheat with gains ranging to more than 2 cents on the Board of Trade today. Mill brokers did the buying early, and the upturn was aided right at the close by some professional short-covering. Final prices were the day's best.

Other grains were steady to firm, although not matching the advance in wheat. For the most part they were aided by the wheat strength. Soybeans staged a good advance, but did not reach the seasonal highs scored in Thursday's market. Trading in lard was light and the market's tone held steady.

Wheat closed ¾-2¼ higher, corn was unchanged to 1 cent higher, oats were ⅛ lower to ⅛ higher, rye was 1½-1¾ higher, soybeans were 2 to 2¾ higher and lard was 5 to 12 cents a hundred pounds higher.

The upturn in wheat sent March and May deliveries to new seasonal highs. Both were aided by a Weather Bureau forecast of high temperatures in the Northwest tomorrow, which some traders thought might cause deterioration in the spring wheat crop. Lurking in the background for both contracts was the possibility Congress would approve a bill supporting prices at 90 per cent of parity next year.

Markets Set Two Records In Past Week

New York, July 23 (AP).—Two of the biggest deals on record added polish this week to Wall Street's reputation as the financial capital of the world.

On Tuesday startled stock traders saw the ticker tape record a sale of 350,000 shares of Commonwealth & Southern Corp. common at a price of $4.50 a share. Not much money was involved—a mere $1,500,000 or so—but that much stock had never before sold in a single block in the history of the exchange.

And on Friday the tape spelled out the sale or a block of $5,352,000 worth of American Telephone & Telegraph bonds. That was one of the largest single transactions in dollars and cents, that the exchange had on its bond record books.

The transfer of 350,000 shares of Commonwealth & Southern common stock was quickly followed by sale of a block of 150,000 shares. Before the closing bell rang on Tuesday total sales in C & S mounted to nearly 800,000 shares, almost equal to trade in all other stocks combined.

The story behind Commonwealth & Southern started a week ago Friday in a Federal court in Wilmington, Del. An order was entered which confirmed, over the opposition of a group of stockholders. A plan for dissolution of the utility empire

Under the terms of the dissolution the owner of each 100 shares of Commonwealth & Southern will receive six shares of Ohio Edison Co. and 35 shares of the Southern Company common stock.

Wall Street strategists went to work on what is known as an arbitrage deal—which, in short, is the simultaneous purchase and sale of the same, or equivalent, articles.

Commonwealth & Southern stock was worth so much on that day. The total price of the two stocks which owners of C. & S. would receive was worth more. So, traders bought C. & S. stock and sold the stocks of Ohio Edison and the Southern Company.

It had the earmarks of a sure-fire deal—but there was at least one hitch.

Wall Street was startled on another front during the week. When the stock exchange disclosed that the outstanding short interest had climbed to a 16-year high, some traders were not only surprised but shocked.

The increase accompanied a steady rise in stock prices to an eight-week high. Market observers had figured confidently that the rise would force many stockholders to cover their short sales.

Sooner or later these short sales must be covered—which puts a comfortable cushion under the market.

Maryland Tobacco

Baltimore, July 23 (AP).—Tobacco sales continued fairly heavy on the Southern Mayland auction markets this week.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture and Maryland State Department of Markets, net auction sales for the week amounted to 2,803,963 lbs. and averaged 54.80 per hundred

This poundage is about 123,000 more than was auctioned during the previous five-day period. The price average is 1.68 lower.

The season nat sales through July 22 were brought to 27,045,129 pounds, averaging 54.

Club Sets Up Memorial Cancer Fund

Establishment of a special fund to provide hospital care and operation's cost of cancer patients unable to pay was announced yesterday by the Women's Progressive Club of Washington.

Starting sum for the project is $1,750, raised by the small social and charitable organization in contributions to its Sarah Corenfield Memorial Cancer Fund, said Mrs. Ruth Albert, club president.

The fund, she announced, will be administered by a club committee acting on the advice and recommendations of Dr. Calvin T. Klopp, director of the Warwick Memorial Cancer Clinic, affiliate of George Washington University Hospital. First beneficiary, Mrs. Albert said, will be a man suffering tongue cancer who can't pay for his own operation.

The club's memorial fund was conceived after the death from cancer of Mrs. Sarah Corenfield, a long active member of the organization. She died on April 30, this year.

In past years, the Women's Progressvie Club has raised about $10,000 for charity work at Children's Hospital, has donated 33 pairs of aluminum crutches to Walter Reed Hospital, has made some 200 Afghans for patients at Walter Reed, and donates $1200 yearly for the care of two children in Europe.

The club's fund committee, who are authorized to accept donations for the project, include Mrs. Frances Whitcup, a past president; Mrs. Caroline Kaplan, secretary, and Mrs. Albert of 124 Ingraham st. nw.

Cardozo High Transfer to Central Urged

The Federation of Civic Associations yesterday urged that Cardozo High School be transferred to Central High School Building, on a temporary basis pending completion of Spingarn High School.

The temporary transfer is one of three plans offered by Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning to help solve the problem of overcrowding at Cardoza. Public hearings on the problem have been scheduled for September 6.

Corning's two other plans provided for either the permanent transfer of Cardoza to Central or the shifting of part of the Cardozo student body to Wilson Teachers College and moving that student body to Central.

This last plan was termed "criminal" by the Civic Federation, which announced disapproval of it.

Boy, 6, Burned Seriously in Boat Blast

A six-year-old boy was severely burned yesterday afternoon when the motor of a small boat exploded as it was being started on Seneca Creek near Seneca, Md.

The boy, Allen Brown, of Mt. Airy, was admitted to Suburban Hospital, Bethesda, with third-degree burns on his body from the waist up. He also suffered burns on his legs. The hospital listed his condition as serious.

According to Montgomery County police the explosion occurred as Allen's father, Preston Brown, attempted to start the motor. The boy was seated on the deck just over the motor and was thrown into a nearby boat by the blast, they said. A third member of the party, Russell Sirk, 28, of Rockville, suffered minor arm burns and was treated on the scene by the Gaithersburg Rescue Squad.

Police theorized that the blast was set off by an accumulation of gasoline fumes around the motor. The three were setting out for a fishing trip on the Potomac River, they said.

Marine Unit Elects Officers

Newport News, Va., July 23 (AP). Delegates to the third annual convention of the State Department of the Marine Corps League today elected E. L. Gwaltney of Portsmouth as State commandant.

Gwaltney succeeds George R. Fletcher of Alexandria.

Other new officers are John A. Blanche, vice commandant; James R. Moore, adjutant-paymaster; Ben Jacobs, judge advocate, and Robert Stewart, chaplain, all of Newport News.

Officers appoited by Gwaltney are Robert B. Stewart of Newport News, vice commandant, northeastern district; Charles Hisey, Alexandria, northwestern vice commandant; Clarence R. Mills of Newport News, southeastern district vice commandant; R. W. Culpeper, Roanoke, southwestern vice commandant; Charles C. Berkleye, jr., Newport News, chief of staff; Howard M. Horton, Alexandria, athletic officer, and Lawrence L. Jacobs, Alexandria, reappointed liaison officer.

A resolution was adopted to establish a department athletic office whose purpose would be to sponsor and promote athletics among teenage groups.

Man, 40, Rescued After Canoe Capsizes

A 40-year-old Ardmore Road, Md., man was pulled out of the Potomac River in a semiconscious state last night after his canoe capsized in the river at the foot of 30th st. nw.

The victim, John Chase, was treated for exhaustion at Georgetown Hospital and released. He was rescued by Roger Frederick, 25, of 918 23d st., who was fishing in a motorboat near by.

Hamiltons Hear Heavenly Music Under Stars

GEN. AND MRS. PIERPONT MORGAN HAMILTON pause at the box office before finding their seats at the Watergate on a Sunday evening. Mrs. Hamilton is chairman of the Air Force Committee for the sustaining fund drive of the National Symphony Orchestra. The general is the grandson of J. P. Morgan and the great-great grandson of Alexander Hamilton. "He looks like Alexander Hamilton on the face of a $20 bill," his wife says. His greatest pride is the congressional Medal of Honor which he was awarded for participation in the North African campaign

The Washington Post

By Elizabeth Maguire

WHEN the sun goes away and leaves the stars, there's music at the Watergate. Symphonies begin with a backdrop of blue and gray waters, and when the last note is struck the waters have turned to silver, streaked with mauve.

The audience is a vast patchwork, mostly pink and blue, with occasional specks of yellow. An unseen audience rocks gently in a flotilla of canoes. Airplanes make a solemn drone overhead, and occasionally there's a buzz, as a small motor travels up river.

In the darkness, the music has a clearer note and sweeter story. A single violin silences the world's woes, and there's beauty, heaven and Heifetz.

Supported by Music Lovers

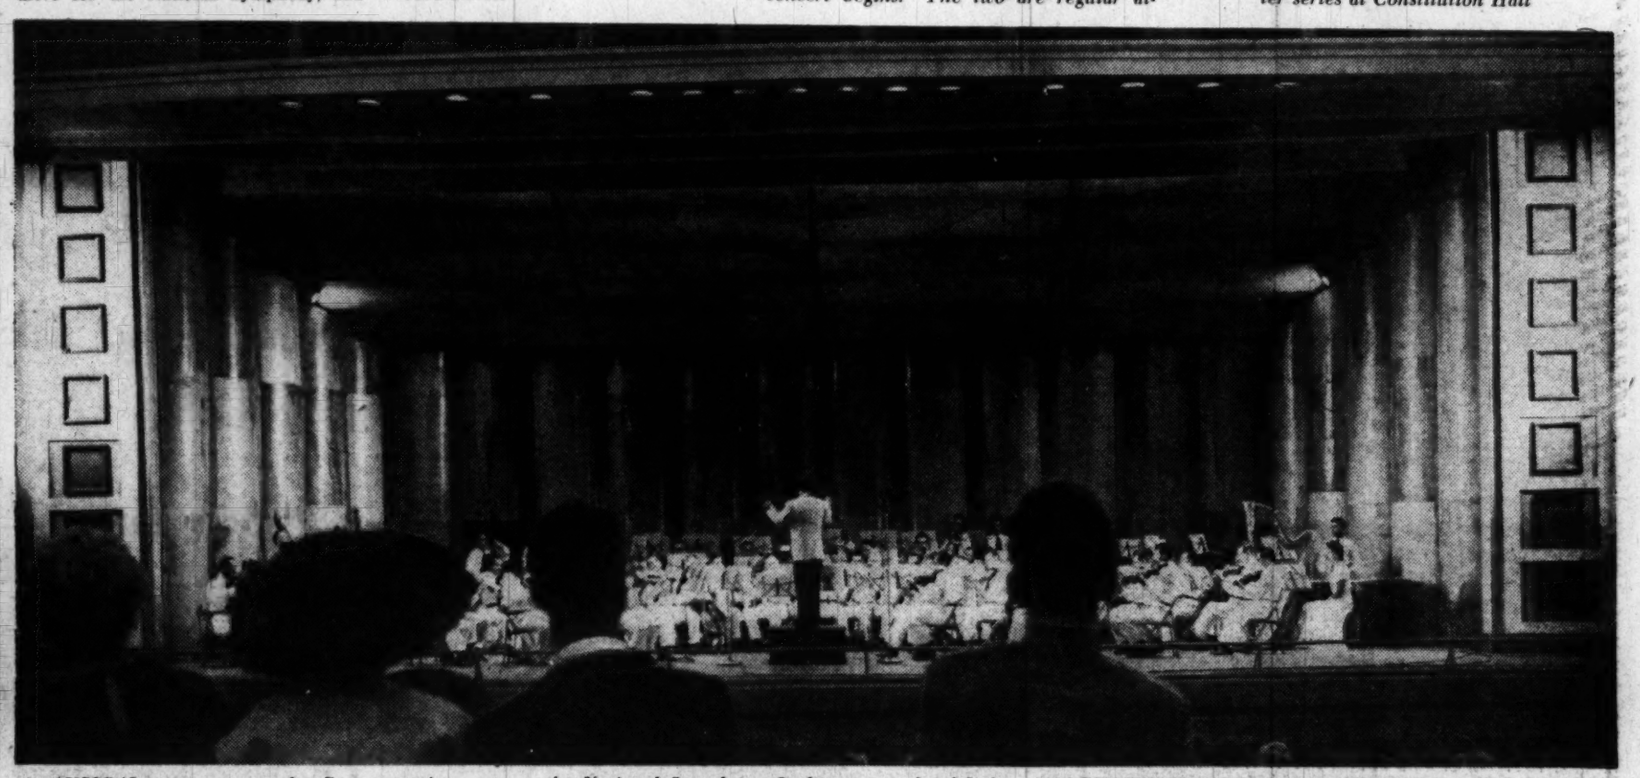
THE Watergate series is supported by a group of prominent Capitalites. One enthusiastic worker is Mrs. Pierpont Morgan Hamilton. Last season she took an active part in the sustaining fund drive for the National Symphony, and she will serve again as committee chairman for the coming season.

She is spending the summer in Washington, as her husband, General Hamilton of the U.S.A.F., is tied to his desk at the Pentagon. She enjoys her coolest and happiest moments when the general takes her to a Watergate concert on a Wednesday or Sunday evening. In their new house, which they have just bought in Georgetown, the Hamiltons have allotted generous space to a super phonograph and shelves of symphony records.

Outdoor Concerts Are Popular

OUTDOOR concerts are popular throughout the country. Most settings provide trees, possibly hills and lakes, but only in Washington do you get music with history. The barge is practically anchored at the Lincoln Memorial, and across the river can be seen the Robert E. Lee mansion, its fat columns lighted up. For a modern touch there's the nearby airport and on the farther shore the flicker of car lights along wooded drives.

GEN. AND MRS. HAMILTON are in their seats just five minutes before the concert begins. The two are regular attendants at the Watergate during the summer, and season ticket holders for the winter series at Constitution Hall



MUSICAL moments on the Potomac—A summer audience at Watergate enjoys a selection from the Coq d'Or Suite by Rimsky-Korsakoff. After the marriage feast and lamentable end of King Dodon, there will be a polka and polonaise from Jacobi's "Prodigal Son." Jan Peerce, tenor, will sing the serenade from the "Student Prince," and the evening will end with Romanian Rhapsody No. 1 Summer programs under the stars by the National Symphony Orchestra are the delight of Washingtonians, and compensate in good measure for our torrid temperatures and humidity The final concert at the Watergate this summer will be held July 29. There will be 26 concerts durin the coming season at Constitution Hall. The Wednesday evening series will include 20 concerts, starting October 26, and the first of the Sunday concerts will be on November 27

Father of the Bride

The Morning Mail Routine Achieves Top Priority, With Invitations Out

This the eighth of 14 installments of that popular saga of the forgotten man, "Father of the Bride." This condensed version of Edward Streeter's novel chronicles the story of Mr. Stanley Banks as he watches the rise of the greatest show on earth (his daughter's wedding) and the fall of his bank account.

By Edward Streeter

FOR many years a light truck, modeled along the lines of a dog-catcher's wagon and labeled "U. S. Mail," had skidded into the Banks drive each morning and delivered a stack of assorted envelopes.

During the course of breakfast Mrs. Banks had ripped hers open with an impatient forefinger, glanced at the contents and tossed them into the wastebasket. Mr. Banks, who resented anything that interfered with his morning paper, tossed most of his in without opening.

Since the invitations had gone out, however, his attitude had changed. The arrival of the morning mail was now a matter of top priority.

"Oh, what a shame! The Lindley Davises can't come," exclaimed Mrs. Banks.

Mr. Banks' face beamed with pleasure.

"Mr. and Mrs. Throckum Nesbitt accept with pleasure. Who in the world are Mr. and Mrs. Throckum Nesbitt?

"Never heard of them. They've got the wrong wedding." Mr. Banks was fumbling with the card file. "My God, they're some people from Pittsburgh! We had them down as 'P. N. C.' Haven't they ever been asked to a wedding before? We don't even know who they are. That's some crust, I'll say. Coming all the way from Pittsburgh!

Each day an increasing number of people, known and unknown, accepted with pleasure. Apparently Kay had selected a day for her wedding when no one within a range of 400 miles had anything to do. The Banks-Dunstan marriage was evidently an oasis in a desert of boredom.

Mr. Banks became increasingy impressed with the stupendousness of the spectacle which he was about to produce, and with the importance of the role which he was slated to play. It wasn't a wedding. It was a pageant. There should be an electric sign on the awning into the church:

MARRIAGE BELLS
A SUPERCOLOSSAL SCENIC DISPLAY
PRODUCED, DIRECTED AND ACTED
BY STANLEY BANKS

As a form of self-torture the idea pleased him. He developed it leisurely as he composed himself to sleep that night.

Sometime during the night he woke up filled with vague apprehension. For a few minutes he couldn't figure out what was bothering him. Then, gradually, the interior of a great cathedral took shape in his half-conscious brain. Its monolithic columns towered up and up, disappearing finally into the darkness above. The place was jammed to the doors with flashily dressed people. Somewhere an organ was thundering like a summer storm.

Suddenly the organ stopped and there was a dead silence broken only by the creaking of stiff collars and the rattle of pearls as a thousand heads turned as if on swivels to the point where he, Stanley Banks, found himself standing, quite alone, at the head of the aisle.

He tried to slip into one of the rear pews, but his feet were rooted to the floor. Then there was a series of terrific boomps from the organ and the peals of the wedding march resounded through the vaulted shadows. A shaft of white light sprang from the gloom above him and placed him in the center of a glaring pool of brilliance.

Alone, pacing slowly to the measured rhythm of the organ, he started down the aisle. It was several hundred yards long and at the end of it he could distinguish the figure of the minister which kept growing larger and larger until it towered over the whole scene and reached into the shadows—huge, sinister, forbidding, daring him to run the gauntlet.

Now he could hear titters from either side. "It's Banks. How grotesque! Why, his clothes don't fit him. Look at his figure! Why, he can't even get his coat buttoned! What a clown of a man!"

The tittering was giving way to shrieks of laughter. People were standing on the seats of the pews and pointing at him. "Look at his knees shake! He'll never make it. He'll go down in a minute. How could a man like that have such a beautiful daughter? They say she isn't his. It's a joke. He's a joke. Banks is nothing but a big fat joke—a big fat joke—a big fat joke. My God, his pants are undone!"

He was sitting up in bed. His forehead was clammy.

"Why don't you take a sleeping pill, dear?" said Mrs. Banks. "It'll quiet you down."

Makes Personal Reconnaissance

OF course Mr. Banks realized that this sort of nocturnal shenanigans was immature and silly. For a successful lawyer it indicated an alarming lack of self-control. However, in spite of his efforts to reason the matter through logically, he felt queasy all day. When he arrived in Fairview Manor late in the afternoon it occurred to him that it might be a good idea to go up and look at the church. The place was deserted.

Standing at the head of the aisle, he studied the terrain like a hunter. Why had he thought of this intimate place as a cathedral?

"Anything I can do for you, sir?" It was Mr. Tringle, the sexton of St. George's. Come to look things over for the wedding? Well, don't get nervous, Mr. Banks. We'll handle everything the way you want it."

"I'm not nervous," said Mr. Banks irritably.

"Of course not. No sir. Some fathers get nervous, though. Good Lord, you wouldn't believe it unless you saw it with your own eyes. Fine upstanding men falling to pieces like that. Somethin' about the sight of a church seems to set 'em off. Seems like men's more highstrung than women that way. Everything'll be all right. Don't give it a thought, sir. I can remember—Oh, have you got to go? Good night, Mr. Banks."

Nothing Ever Fazes 'Pops'

A SHORT time later he found himself sitting on the living-room sofa with Kay, sipping his evening old-fashioned. Kay suddenly slipped her arm through his. He patted her hand absently, his mind on Mr. Tringle.

"I know I'm a fool, Pops, but I want to talk to you about something. You won't think I'm silly, will you?"

"Of course not, Kitten. What's bothering?"

"I'm scared, Pops. Scared to death."

Mr. Banks stared and took a substantial swallow. "Scared? What are you scared of? Getting married isn't anything to be scared of. Marriage is the most normal—"

"Oh, Pops, I'm not scared of marriage. It's much sillier than that. This thing is getting bigger an' bigger. Oh, I know it's ungrateful, Pops. You're wonderful. But sometimes it scares the living daylights out of me."

Mr. Banks glanced toward the kitchen and dropped his voice. "You mean like going down the aisle?"

"Every time I think of it, Pops, I turn into a cold sweat. Suppose my knees got shaking just as I started. And suppose they shook so finally that they let me down entirely and you had to drag me to the altar like a sack of meal."

Mr. Banks pulled himself together with an almost visible effort. "Listen, Kitten. Get this into your head. There's nothing to worry about. See? Nothing to worry about. All your life when you've been bothered I've been there, haven't I? Well, I'll be there when that wedding march starts. All you've got to do is to take my arm, lean on me and think about how you're the most beautiful bride in the world and how proud I am of you. That's all. Just relax. I'll do the rest."

"Oh, Pops!" Kay was looking at him with loving reverence. "You are wonderful. Nobody could be scared with you. Nothing ever fazes you, does it, Pops?"

There Is Always One of Them

THE first present came two days after the engagement had been announced in the papers. It was a hand-painted tray.

For a few days it looked as if the first present might achieve the double honor of being the last as well. Then they began to move in! A thin trickle at first, growing steadily to a mighty stream.

What puzzled Mr. Banks was that neither Mrs. Banks nor Kay ever forgot a detail in connection with any gift. For 23 years he had been impressed by the fact that neither of them seemed capable of grasping or retaining the most elementary details. Mrs. Banks could never remember, for example, whether the mortgage company owed Mr. Banks money or vice versa, and Kay still thought that the Rubaiyat was a toothpaste, but when it came to the matter of wedding presents, their donors and their sources, they both had memories like rogue elephants.

Given enough ointment there is always a fly. Given enough presents there is always One-of-Them. They are as inevitable as death. The only thing that is unpredictable is the direction from which they come. Kay's arrived one Saturday in a large wooden box, buried deep in Its nest of excelsior as if trying to hide Its shame.

It was a china lad in a china pink coat and a china maid in a Harlem pink skirt, crossing a china bridge which did not bridge anything, on Harlem blue china feet. As It rose from Its hiding place the family looked at It in stunned silence

Mr. Banks was the first to recover himself. "Who?" he demanded through clenched teeth. They pawed through the excelsior and fished out a card. "With love and affection from Aunt Marne."

Aunt Marne, of all people! The one member of the family who had been counted on to come across handsomely—preferably with a substantial check! She was rich, she was unmarried and she spent a week with the Bankses each fall.

Life was never quite the same after the arrival of Aunt Marne's present. Gone now the simple note. Gone the spirit of guileless appreciation for a gift as such. From this point on the contents of each incoming package were appraised with the cold commercialism of an Oriental bazaar.

"What is it?"

"Another tray."

Deep groan from Kay. "It's a stinker, too."

"We can take it back. Where's it from?"

"The Tucker Gift Shop."

"We have almost enough junk from there, darling, to get something you really want."

"The trouble is there's nothing in the Tucker Gift Shop that anybody wants."

Mr. Banks, the erstwhile cynic of the family, found himself cringing in the face of this cold brutality. His heart went out in sympathy to the army of breadwinners who would soon be tearing out what little hair was left over the bills from the Tucker Gift Shop.

"That's a nice tray," he would remark fatuously. "What's the matter with it? There are lots of girls would give their eyeteeth—"

"Oh, Pops, you don't know anything about it. Let them keep their teeth. They can have it for nothing."

Mr. Banks hated to see Kay get hard.

WHEN I WAS . . .
Father of the Bride

By Emmet O'Neal

As a former member of the United States House of Representatives and one-time Ambassador to the Philippines, Emmet O'Neal has official protocol mastered to the point where it disturbs him not. But wedding protocol, preparations and performances—they are another matter! The wedding of his daughter, Lydia Wright O'Neal, to William David Stewart Fraser on May 28 has left him benumbed.

MR. STREETER'S book on "Father of the Bride" is a thorough clinical report up to a point. In the interests of science and to aid other fathers so stricken, I would like to report some strange seizures and manifestations not emphasized by Mr. Streeter.

It is only shortly before the wedding that the father realizes that he and his daughter are parted by an operation. The first needle which starts the anaesthesia is the evident conspiracy to outlaw him from all conferences held by members of his family. Occasionally he asks a question apologetically and is humiliated by the evasiveness of the answer.

(On the choice of church for the wedding, which took place in our home town of Louisville, Ky., I was permitted to make a suggestion. But then, so was everybody else. Since the bridegroom is High Episcopalian, the bride has Baptist affiliations, other members of the family are Methodist, Presbyterian and several other sects, we settled on the Christian Church of which no member of the family is a member.

After long and complex discussions the Christian Church won out for the beauty of its chapel and the nearness my daughter felt for the pastor, who had been a next door neighbor of ours for many years.)

Develops Loneliness Complex

THE PATIENT—the father—develops a loneliness complex, a feeling of complete isolation which induces a condition of weakness and inferiority. A dizziness sets in as a result of the terrific buzzing caused by dressmakers, florists, jewelers, caterers, walking encyclopedias of wedding know-how and other dictatorial specialists in wedding protocol.

When the father's eyes have glazed and he is thoroughly numbed and shows no signs of feeling, the hour for the operation has come. He is deep in "twilight sleep."

The post-operational period finds the subject still in a comatose state. He approaches normalcy and the realities of daily life very slowly. His reactions are slow, his responses poor, except to the little envelopes delivered daily by the postman—the envelopes with the little transparent windows. These offer daily shock treatments which in time return him to an alert

Misses Suzanne Juvenal, Marjorie Lynn Smith, Nita Katz, Plan Autumn Weddings

Rear Admiral William W. Juvenal, USN, retired, and Mrs. Juvenal of Findlay, Ohio, announce the engagement of their daughter, Suzanne, to Second Lieut. Austin B. Middleton, USMC, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Middleton of Deer Lodge, Mont.

Miss Juvenal attended George Washington University and the Abbott Art School. She continued her art studies in Paris.

Lieutenant Middleton attended the University of Montana and was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1946. He is now on duty at Camp Lejeune, N. C.

The wedding is planned for late November.

Smith—Allen

The engagement of Miss Marjorie Lynn Smith and Rembert Gary Allen, jr., was announced last evening at a buffet supper given at the home of Mrs. Dorothy Sigman Allen, mother of the prospective bridegroom, in Arlington Forest, Va.

Miss Smith is the daughter of the Rev. Hollis S. Smith, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church in Somerville, N. J., and of the late Mrs. Anne Piper Smith. She is the granddaughter of Col. Alexander R. Piper, USA, retired, of South Salem, Westchester County, N. Y. She was graduated from Beaver College, Jenkintown, Pa., in 1948 and has been with the Veterans' Administration as an interior decorator. Mr. Allen is the son of Rembert G. Allen of Vienna, Va., and a grandson of Prof. Frank G. Sigman of Manassas, Va. He is at present attending George Washington University and is employed as an architectural draftsman for the Veterans' Administration.

The wedding will take place in October.

Katz—Abramowitz

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Katz announced the engagement of their daughter, Nita, to Norman Abramowitz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Abramowitz, also of Washington.

Miss Katz is a graduate of Coolidge High School and a member of Sigma Pi Sigma Sorority. Mr. Abramowitz was graduated from Roosevelt High School. He is now serving with the Armed Forces. The wedding will take place next year.

Mathews—Tupper

The engagement of her daughter, Miss Sara Anne Mathews, to Donald Lee Tupper has been announced by Mrs. Audrey M. Mathews. Mr. Tupper is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dewey M. Tupper of Lansing, Mich.

The wedding will take place in early September.

Pridgen—Covell

Mr. and Mrs. Haynes Monroe Pridgen announce the engagement of their daughter, Barbara Ann, to Donald Edward Covell, son of First Sergt. and Mrs. Gerald Glenwood Covell of Glen Burnie, Md.

The bride-elect attended Southeastern University and the University of Maryland where she was a member of Kappa Delta Sorority. Mr. Covell attended the University of Hawaii and was graduated from the University of Maryland last June. He was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity and Sigma Alpha Omicron, national bacteriological honorary fraternity. During the war he served with the United States Army Infantry and Engineers.

The wedding will take place in November.

Yeatman—Yaremchuk

Mrs. Lillie Golden Yeatman, of Arlington, Va., announces the engagement of her daughter, Elizabeth, to John Yaremchuk, son of Mrs. M. R. Yaremchuk of Fairmont, W. Va.

Miss Yeatman has selected August 28 as the date of her marriage.

Sardo—Ammerman

The engagement of Mrs. Louise Cruit Sardo of Washington and Miami Beach to Edwin Haven Ammerman of Brooklyn and Washington has been announced by the bride-elect's brother, Richard Clyde Cruit of Washington. Mrs. Sardo is the widow of Willam Henry Sardo.

The wedding will take place in the fall.

BACKGROUND OF A BENEFIT: There'll be a picnic, an antique sale, a baseball game, and all sorts of other exciting events next Tuesday on the lawn of Sherwood High at Sandy Spring, Md., when the annual benefit for the Montgomery County General Hospital is held. It's an event that has gained wide fame among Marylanders and their neighbors and calls for plenty of work on the part of Montgomery County women

One of these is Mrs. Everett B. Wilson, jr., of Chevy Chase, who is pictured here as she joins with friends in various preparations. Above—In the shady side yard of the Wilson home, Mrs. Eugene W. Scott (right) of Bethesda and Mrs. Wilson get together for a quiet afternoon of sewing on aprons for the fancywork table. Mrs. Scott is chairman of the hospital building fund-raising committee

Montgomery's Agog With Picnic Doings

By Lucia Brown

OUT IN Montgomery County it's time for baking luscious layer cakes, for running down frying-sized chickens, for digging antiques from the attic, hickory-cured hams from the smoke house, and prize plants from the garden.

In other words, it's almost time for the annual benefit and picnic for the Montgomery County General Hospital at Sandy Spring, Md. It will be held next Tuesday, July 26, and preparations are in full swing in homes all over the county. Hundreds of friends and neighbors are expected to gather beneath the shade trees on the Sherwood High lawn for the event, which begins at 3 p. m.

For the first time since before the war, fried chickens (300 of 'em) will be served at the picnic. There'll be 400 home-baked cakes, 30 country hams, and 100 pounds of homemade candy. Chicken salad, pies, ice cream, lemonade and other beverages will round out the menu.

There will be pony rides, a baseball game, a grab bag, and movies for the youngsters, along with the traditional booths of fancy work, flowers, and plants, antiques, bric-a-brac, and a "country store" offering fresh garden vegetables.

The Melody Singers, a Sandy Spring group famous for their interpretation of ballads and spirituals, will give a program at 8 p. m. If attendance equals past years, there'll be some 1500 persons visiting the benefit during the afternoon and evening. The public is invited.

The women's board of the hospital sponsors the event. Proceeds are used for the hospital, which currently is adding a maternity department, enlarging the nursery, and expanding the heating plant.

A COOKING BEE—In preparation for the picnic Tuesday, Mrs. W. Arthur Carr (center) of Brighton, Md., and Mrs. Arthur L. Winn, jr. (right), of Brinklow are visited by Mrs. Wilson as she scouts around for details to use in advance publicity for the benefit. There'll be 30 country hams, like the one Mrs. Carr is holding, baked for the event, and 400 home-made cakes for sale. Mrs. Carr is treasurer of the Montgomery County Hospital board of directors condition. However, as he becomes more alert he finds these shock treatments more and more painful.

During the course of his recovery he suffers relapses. He must try one of his daughter's home-cooked meals. The bridegroom is young and can digest anything, but in his weakened condition the father is not strengthened thereby.

In reading through Mr. Streeter's book this father has also had reason to wonder if his labial muscles have been permanently impaired and his enunciation ruined. Throughout the book reference is made to some innocent little drinks which Mr. Streeter calls "old fashioneds." Possibly as a result of the paralyzing effects of the operation, I cannot pronounce all the letters. I can say "one old fashioned" or "two old fashions" but it takes three drinks to make me say "old fashion-eds."

Annapolis Activities

Annapolis, Md., July 23.—Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., Superintendent of the Naval Academy, and Mrs. Holloway were in Washington Saturday to attend a dinner given by Vice Admiral R. B. Carney, deputy chief of naval operations, and Mrs. Carney.

In honor of Rear Admiral and Mrs. John T. Bottom, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. George D. Hilding were hosts last Sunday afternoon at their Wardour home, 7 Sherwood rd., at a very delightful entertainment from 5 to 7 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mrs. Holloway returned Wednesday from Virginia Beach, where she visited her daughter, Mrs. Lawrence Hayworth, jr.

Admiral and Mrs. Holloway have as their house guest this week Mrs. Johnson Hagood, jr., of Caracas, Venezuela, a sister-in-law of Mrs. Holloway.

Lieut. Comdr. James M. Robertson, formerly of the department of electrical engineering at the Academy, after a temporary tour of duty at the office of chief of naval operations, Navy Department, in Washington, has been ordered to duty as Assistant United States Naval Attache and Assistant United States Naval Attache for Air in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. With Mrs. Robertson and their two young children, Kathleen and Jamie, Lieut. Comdr. Robertson will leave their Scott dr. residence in West Annapolis about the first of August, preparatory to sailing from New York August 12 for their new home in Brazil.

Another officer formerly with the department of electrical engineering at the Naval Academy who is off for a faraway post is Lieut. Comdr. John A. Fairchild, who has been ordered to Ankara, Turkey, where he will be assigned to the staff of the Chief of Naval Group, American Mission for Aid to Turkey. Mrs. Fairchild will be in Tennessee with her mother and the couple's two children until their sailing date in the early autumn.

Assistant Prof. Joseph P. d'Elia, who is attached to the civilian faculty of the Naval Academy department of foreign languages, is visiting his home in Oriolo, Calabro, Italy, this summer. While there he is taking refresher courses in the Italian language.

Mrs. Diggs Logan and son, Teddy, of Severn View, Annapolis, left Monday for Charleston, S. C., motoring with Captain Logan who had joined them here over the weekend. Captain Logan, who was commanding officer of the U.S.S. President Adams, has just reported for duty as Director of Naval Reserve, Sixth Naval District, at Charleston, and the family will live there.

A wedding of much interest in Annapolis took place last Saturday, in Calvary Methodist Church here, when Miss Betty Louise Baker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur William Baker, of 109 Market st., became the bride of Corp. Donald Leopold, jr., USAF, son of Mrs. Alice Leopold of Washington.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. J. Luther Neff, pastor of Calvary Church, assisted by Dr. Smith of Baltimore.

The bride had as her matron of honor, her sister, Mrs. Marjorie Baker Mayer. Her bridesmaids included Miss Nancy Myers of Annapolis; Miss Betty Jane Wills of Baltimore, and Miss Barbara Hessert and Miss Catherine Hessert of Williamsport, Pa. Mary Margaret Wills of Baltimore was flower girl.

The ceremony was followed by a reception in the church parlor.

Another wedding solemnized on July 16 in Calvary Church was that of Louise Elizabeth Pollock, Lieut. (j.g.) NC, USN, and Francis Patrick Corr, son of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Corr, of Province, R. I.

Lieutenant Pollock, daughter of Mrs. Sarah Pollock, 95 Conduit st., Annapolis, has just returned from duty at the Naval Hospital, Guam, Marianas Islands.

The Rev. Dr. Neff officiated at the 2 o'clock ceremony.

Lieutenant Pollock was graduated from Annapolis High School and West Baltimore General School of Nursing. Mr. Corr is a graduate of LaSalle University and Brown University. He has just completed a tour of duty with the Guam Civil Police as assistant chief of police, B.P.M., Guam.

Ensign and Mrs. William H. Barnes 3d, who have been residing in Homoja Village, left Tuesday for California. En route to the officer's new duty in San Diego they will stop for a visit to Mrs. Barnes' brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Lynch, jr., at their home in San Francisco.

Mrs. Barnes is the former Fay Anderson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Albert L. Anderson, of 44 Southgate ave., Annapolis, whose wedding to Ensign Barnes was an event of April 30 in St. Andrew's Chapel at the Naval Academy.

Girl Who Has Year to Go Before Completing Nurse Training Is Besieged by Minister to Marry Him Now; New Job Offer Calls for Wife

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Some months ago I met a minister and through pleasant associations we have fallen in love. Recently he was assigned a church with a very nice parsonage out of town, and he wants us to marry immediately.

In his denomination the church seems to provide a more comfortable parsonage for a married man than a single man; and knowing that I love him, he gave assurance that he plans to marry not later than September.

However, I need advice. I am in my last year of nurse training, something I have worked very hard to obtain. I finish the course next Spring—or such was my aim. It is most interesting and I have made very good grades; but Ralph says it is valueless, because he is quite capable of supporting a wife.

Is Her Vocational Allegiance Selfish?

I DON'T question that, and my eagerness to finish isn't just to be able to qualify for gainful employment some day. Nor am I anxious to finish because I think that some day I might have to earn my own livelihood. It's knowledge that I thirst after. I never tire of learning.

I'd like nothing better than to marry Ralph and share a beautiful religious life that I think we could have together; but what about my training? Am I selfish in not wanting to give up my training and take my place at his side, as the helpmeet of a man whom God has chosen to serve Him? Your answer will be appreciated. E. V.

Suitor Adroitly Confuses Conflict

DEAR E. V.: Having invested a lot in nurse training, and with the home-stretch in sight, you certainly should complete the course without interruption, if at all possible.

In the event you were to break off now, and later have need or opportunity to try to take up where you left off, you might find that extensive scientific advances had cancelled out some, or even much, of the "credit" value of previous study—so that you'd have to backtrack in many fields to recoup ground lost.

In my judgment, Ralph is a pretty fluent talker who is almost able to persuade you that black is white. He confuses the issue adroitly in challenging your "willingness" to marry him; and in arguing his ability to support a wife.

At bottom, the problem has to do with a subtle shortage of ballast and rectitude in his make-up. Obviously his impatience to get married immediately is a self-serving demand, a by-product of his opportunistic pledge to church authorities to have a wife by next September, if necessary for job-advancement.

His Campaign Is Expedient

HE IS on a hot spot, I grant, having presumed too much in supposing you'd scrap nurse training to jump at his impromptu proposal; and in the event you by-pass the offer, at least for now, he may see fit to rustle up a second-choice bride, in order to qualify for the post he's after.

In view of his expedient bias, I'd be rather surprised if he mustered the courageous meek candor to tell committeemen—"I spoke too hastily, it seems; my girl says marriage must wait until next June." Yet if he has that sort of honesty, waiting to show itself in a crisis, and if he made clear your reasons for biding your time, and seemed disposed to wait for you, whether or not he lost the plum, it's possible the committee might decide, "Here is a solid man; we'd better hold on to him."

Whatever he does, my advice is, don't drop nurse-training to marry him. If he can't wait, he's not dependably interested in you as a person; and your welfare would never be a first consideration with him. Indeed, his current overriding indifference to your student status and consultative rights embodies none of that "respect for human dignity" which a pastor, above all men, should devotedly exemplify. The Family Scrapbook

More Travel Games

Parents who have a bagful of suggestions for travel games will find that the time goes much more quickly when the family is traveling. Here are a few tried and true pastimes that are worth trying the next time you take a long trip.

Counting White. Players watch for anything white along the road or the tracks. Each white object observed and correctly named counts a certain number of points. A white horse can count five points, a white cat eight points, a man with a white beard ten points, and so on. Such a common object as a white house should, of course, be worth fewer points than some of the more rare items.

"I see something you can see." The player who is "it" makes this statement and points his finger at one of the other players. The latter may ask one question and then make his guess. If he misses, the turn goes to another who likewise asks a question and makes his guess. The one with the largest number of correct guesses at the end of an agreed-upon period of time is the winner.

Rhyme Time. Most children like to make rhymes. A simple game involving rhymes has one player say, "I am thinking of a word rhyming with 'man'." Another player asks, "Is it 'tan'?" The words used here are only examples, of course. Older children or adults will want to use much more complicated ones.

She Made the Grade, 7 Pounds Lighter

Diet Diary Charts Course, Wavering But Unfaltering Through All Temptation

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY, last, I described, in perhaps too intimate detail, what drove me to diet; my first-day ordeal; the dawn of a second day, signaled auspiciously by the loss of two whole juicy pounds.

SECOND DAY. I stepped on and off the scales several times, savoring the exquisite sensation of watching the quivery needle careen two pounds to the left. Smugly I scrambled the egg, minus butter, in the double boiler, did my best to scrape (but failed miserably) eggy residue from the pot. I sat down cosily with egg, coffee, orange juice, vitamin pills, toast.

The first morning my sole slice of melba toast, though scarcely gastronomically exciting, had been crisp and agreeable enough to nibble. Today, the contents of the opened box had absorbed more than their fair share of Washington humidity. My gustatory efforts had been so absorbing I quite forgot the vitamin pill (La Kain insists after breakfast is vitamin time).

I lunched with Dr. William Mann at the Zoo. As I had forgotten to bring along the diet I was in quiet a pother. However, I remembered vaguely seeing cottage cheese somewhere along the line. So I ordered a gob of the substance and washed it down with iced tea. After seeing Jungle Jenny and innumerable small, restless beasts, I felt faint, but proud. Undoubtedly I was way under the luncheon calorie limit so I promised myself a tiny suppertime binge. This evil thought gave me the most intense pleasure during a drab afternoon.

There were guests for supper. Wine was in order and my glass was almost filled with nice, icy, vin rose when my daughter cried out sharply as though she'd been stung by a bee, "Stop! Mother's on a diet!" I drank the wine, though I noticed, too, that I actually didn't WANT the second slice of meat loaf.

THIRD DAY. As dawn broke around 9, I glanced down apprehensively at my stomach. It didn't seem at all flat. Horrors! Could I have gained? Was it the wine? I fairly leaped to the scales. I just couldn't believe what I saw!

That lovely, adorable, little needle shuddered delicately, then plunged another TWO POUNDS to the left. I was floating on air. Even the melba toast which had been thoughtfully parked overnight in the oven (a not too successful maneuver) seemed a delight. That evening I dined at an embassy. I wore a bright pink dress and I couldn't help notice I was a trifle gray around the gills. Knowing the embassy food would be a great temptation, I decided to eat my diet dinner FIRST. Steak was the bright spot. A curiously flaccid, intolerably skinny bit of gray meat lay inert on a very small portion of my plate. "What's this supposed to be?" I asked angrily. "Meat!" she snapped, folding arms across bosom. "We can't go around ordering steaks."

When I told my host I had eaten dinner which had included an imitation steak, he was most sympathetic, said there was undoubtedly an unused steak somewhere in the embassy. This proved to be true and while the others ate lobster with a rich, rich sauce, followed by squabs doused in cherries, I had a minute steak. I refused champagne, thereby exhibiting a nobility of character I could scarcely credit. But when a voluptuous dessert appeared, my flesh was too feeble, my spirit too broken to endure it.

FOURTH DAY. I woke up quite early and pondered whether or not I could skip weighing, just this one day.

Then I remembered the telephone calls, the kind readers who had called to check my progress. So, most reluctantly, I stepped on the scales. The faithful needle, skipping a beat, indicated a half pound loss. "That dessert!" I snarled furiously.

I lunched with a Senator's wife who was giving a buffet hen party. There was salad laced with fattening avocado, cheeses in variety, ice cream with cherries Jubilee. I placed a modest amount of salad on my plate, avoiding the avocado, concentrating on sliced hardboiled eggs. I had iced tea, and the 10 raw cherries prescribed by meticulous Miss Kain.

FIFTH DAY. Another half pound vanished. I had made the five-pound grade in as many days! I felt no particular elation. I had really lost my desire for food. I was pretty cross, too. Only the encouraging Kain chirrup "Splendid!" bolstered my beginning-to-sag-morale.

I was beginning to feel quite ethereal, far apart from reality. That night, though, the worst thing happened. I went to the ice box to get a glass of cold water. I saw a chicken carcass wrapped so hygenically in waxed paper. Some sudden compulsion made me unswaddle it. I saw the stuffing was only half eaten. I spooned it out, ate every soggy, delicious morsel. Fortunately, it was a very small chicken.

SIXTH, SEVENTH, EIGHTH DAYS. During this 72-hour span I was definitely in the doldrums. I didn't lose an ounce, but I didn't gain an ounce, either. It was uncannily just what Ida Jean Kain predicted. She encouraged me by telephone, came around with a bottle of her special salad dressing, some chicory, a plant which DOESN'T grow in Georgetown grocery stores. I went to New York, lunched with three Scandinavians in a Swedish restaurant.

They ordered beer, aquavit, 18 kinds of smorgasbord, dolmas in cabbage leaves, ligonberry preserves, Swedish bread, Danish pancakes filled with crimson jelly. I ate a dolma (chopped meat), without sauce, some string beans, a melon and one piece of Swedish bread. They were quite annoyed.

NINTH DAY. Another pound was gone. I noticed I was able to eat any kind of salad quite without dressing. I was to lunch at a local hotel, and not wanting to fool around with dolmas or take any calory risk, I telephoned Miss Kain. "Let's see," she mused. "How about two big slices of turkey—white meat, of course,—a salad without dressing, a casaba melon?"

During the meal, a member of the press who works on one of Washington's duller newspapers, came over to see whether I was cheating the public. She looked at my plate, asked suspiciously, "Where have you taken off those pounds?" "Under this shirring," I leered, pointing to where my full skirt met bodice. The waiter, was the most perceptive I've ever known. He whisked away butter, bread. "You won't be wanting these, I suppose!"

That afternoon I went to small cocktail party. For perhaps the first time, I noticed how many cocktails most people drink when they can sit down comfortably. It adds up to an impressive calory total.

TENTH DAY. A seventh pound was gone with the wind. "Too much," warned Ida Jean, "I'm going to give you a nice big glass of orange juice this afternoon." I lunched at the Mayflower. Though I arrived late there were quite a few friends about and I showed myself sideways, frontways, anyways. Everyone was kind enough to say they noticed a definite improvement. Personally, I thought it was my black dress. At luncheon, when THREE halves of deviled eggs mysteriously blossomed, I gave one away without a qualm. I ate salad without dressing, never bothering with a sprinkle of vinegar. I even divided a wedge of Swiss gruyere cheese without a quiver of resentment. I urged others to order martinis, just for the sadistic pleasure of figuring out their calory intake. In other words, I had whipped my appetite, my nibbling—at least for the moment. By the time this goes to press, I'll have continued the diet two more days. Besides poundage, the following inches have disappeared—Bust, 1 inch (I add hastily, from the back, not the front!) waist, 2 inches, hips 1 inch, abdomen, 1 inch. Not even a small fraction came off what Ida Jean calls a "thigh" but what I call an upper leg! Perhaps, my stretching wasn't energetic enough—in fact, I'm darn sure it wasn't! I'll be back Tuesday with all the gruesome details of trying to exercise in hot weather.

Everybody Can Win!

Answer These Questions For a Faultless Vacation

By Ida Jean Kain

THE PRIZE for knowing the answers to this summer quiz can be a happier vacation. Read the question and answer true or false, before reading the correct answer given immediately below each question:

1. The ideal time for sun bathing is before 9 o'clock in the morning. True or false? That's true. It's from dawn to 9 a. m., and the next best time is from 4 p. m. until sundown. During hours other than these, direct exposure to the sun must be in small doses. Until you have a protective coat of tan, keep covered during the hot part of the day.

2. It's perfectly safe to stay in the sun on hazy days. True or false? False. Those are the days to be on guard—the rays that cause the burn come right through the vapor. On such days you burn without browning.

3. Blonds are always most susceptible to sunburn. False. It depends on the sensitivity of the skin. Redheads should be particularly careful.

4. Here's a trick one: What is the best way to make hay while the sun shines? Answer: Let the sun shine too long on a permanent wave!

5. A two-hour wait after eating before going swimming, will positively eliminate the danger of muscular cramps. False. If you've eaten a very hearty meal of slowly digested foods, better wait more than the traditional two hours before attempting a long swim. Authorities say that even after five hours, such a meal can cause cramps. On a light, easily digested meal, however, it is not always necessary to wait two hours.

6. It's risky business to plunge into the pool after a heated game of tennis or baseball. True. It's especially bad for anyone with a heart condition. Relax after active sports . . . sit down and cool off first. It's well to relax after swimming, too, rather than going right on to some other strenuous activity.

7. If you've been cooped up in an office all year, what you need now is plenty of vigorous exercise—you should start the vacation right off by swimming across the lake or climbing a mountain. False! Too much exertion the first few days, and you'll spent the rest of your vacation recuperating. The great outdoors may give you that rugged feeling, but ease into action. Hike a few miles the first few days before tackling a mountain. Swimming is strenuous exercise—build up endurance gradually.

And by the way, watch out for that three-leafed plant!

"... who says you can't write your own Farm-for-Sale ad?"

Sure you can write your own want ad. Lots of people do—and they get results, too!

Here's the secret in two words—Tell ALL! Be sure to include everything your reader wants to know. Make it readable and attractive, too—that helps a lot. But the main thing is . . . Tell All.

Buying a farm is a practical proposition, so your reader wants facts. That's easy—just tell him the things you'd want to know if you were doing the buying. Acreage . . . crops . . . buildings . . . livestock . . . everything you can think of. Check over the suggested list below for ideas.

Make each word count, but put everything in. With classified advertising so inexpensive, cost per ad is of minor importance. The important thing is to get results fast. This in itself cuts down the over-all advertising cost.

Try it! Write your own "Farm for Sale" ad—or any other kind of classified ad you need. Remember, if you don't like your own efforts, you can call NAtional 4200 and ask for an ad writer. Or if you're outside the city, send a postcard or letter to the Classified Department, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C., explaining what you have for sale. An experienced Post ad writer will be glad to help you word your ad.

Those 'Usually Reliable Sources' Are Set to Hail First Woman Ambassador

By Marie McNair

FROM OKLAHOMA'S rolling country will come the first woman Ambassador of the United States. That's the story going the rounds in Washington today among those who say they oughtta know.

A banker, ranch owner and the mother of five children besides, she's been influential enough in politics to be named Democratic National Committeewoman from her State.

Her name? Mrs. Mabel Kennedy of Pawhuska.

In connection with President Truman's recent policy, Mrs. Kennedy's name comes up as a probable envoy to a South American country. Mrs. Perle Mesta, who hails from Oklahoma also, but votes in Rhode Island, is now Minister to Luxembourg, and former Representative Georgia Lusk has been mentioned as due a political plum in the foreign service field.

Mrs. Kennedy isn't an unknown in Washington. She's visited here many times, used to come more often when her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. McClintock, lived here during the war.

A widow, Mrs. Kennedy is described by her friends as vivacious and very feminine, with plenty of common sense. She took over her husband's business upon his death more than a dozen years ago.

"It wasn't very difficult, for I was raised on ranches and the banking part I learned from enforced listening to conferences" she said, on one of her visits to the Capital, not long ago. Her five ranches spread for thousands of acres over fertile Osage County. White-faced cattle roam for miles on end, each allotted six acres of range land. And coupled with the blue-stem grass on which they feed, it makes them one of the finest breeds in the land.

Mrs. Kennedy could speak the argot in almost any of the South American countries, agriculturally rich, and like Argentina, Ecuador, Uruguay and Chile, noted for its fine stock.

Moreover, she would be welcome as an American, typifying the best of her sex, who surmounted difficulties, overrode obstacles.

Air Force Secretary Relaxes

WEEKENDING at Watch Hill, R. I., is Stuart Symington, Secretary of the Air Force, who has joined Mrs. Symington at their summer cottage. Mrs. Symington, Philip Barry, the playwright, and Mrs. Barry, went over from Watch Hill to Newport Thursday night to see Sarah Churchill, in Mr. Barry's play, 'The Philadelphia Story."

Jane Abell, who's with husband George while he serves as press relations officer in Bavaria, has been writing music like mad, with the result that eight of her songs will be introduced in the next film for Isle Werner, known as the "Ginger Rogers of Germany."

TOWN TOPICS:

Word from Gen. and Mrs. John N. Greely, now in Paris and leaving the French Capital August 1 for Juan les Pins, Cote d'Azur, on the Riviera, is that Paris looks prosperous and cheerful and very like old times. The Greelys watched the Bastille Day celebration and recalled they had been in Paris on July 14 in 1929 and 1939, by purest coincidence. After a visit to Italy, and Germany they'll sail from the last named country on August 26 for home.

Mrs. John M. Cabot, wife of our Consul General in Shanghai, will be back from Manchester, Mass., when Mr. Cabot arrives within a fortnight from China to report to the State Department. Marjorie Cabot, eldest of the three young Cabots, will be a debutante this winter, I've been told.

Here for a short visit and staying at the Statler are the former Dominican Ambassador and Senora de Ortega Frier. The Ortega Friers were succeeded at the embassy by the present Ambassador, Luis Thomen and Senora de Thomen.

Two Bags, Hatbox Hold 6-Week Trip Needs

By Peggy Preston

THERE'S been a most remarkable woman in town lately. She flew in from California for a six-week visit on the East Coast, and guess how much luggage she brought? One suitcase, an overnight bag and a hatbox!

Furthermore, she totes with her as handsome and versatile a wardrobe as one might see in a month of fashion shows. Her name is Mrs. Harry Goetz, and Washington knew her well as Catherine Conner, Kentucky's dashing National Committeewoman from 1932 to 1940.

"No, it isn't done with mirrors," Mrs. Goetz assured this skeptical fashion reporter. "It's just a matter of carrying lightweight, packable clothes, and filling every available inch of your luggage." Then, to make matters worse, she explained that on this trip she had to bring town clothes for New York and Washington; beach wear for weekends, and something suitable for her country home in Kentucky.

And as She Packed the Wonder Grew

Since seeing is believing, we hovered nearby as Mrs. Goetz repacked her bags in her Mayflower Hotel room in preparation for a flying trip to New York.

We counted six pairs of shoes, four handbags, 15 dresses, a silk suit, wool coat, scads of spotless gloves, clouds of nylon lingerie. Of hats there were only four and Mrs. Goetz accorded them scant attention. A confirmed Californian, she scorns headgear, wears a bonnet only when she comes East.

All but convinced, we thought we had her on a technicality. "How about cosmetics, jewelry, etc?" we asked, smugly. With a deft hand Mrs. Goetz began slipping in creams, lotions, lipsticks and perfumes, tucking here and there throughout her luggage.

"You save space that way," she explained. "I never carry fitted pieces of luggage because they are too heavy, and most of the bottles and boxes are useless to me."

Every garment in her travel wardrobe is featherweight. Tissue ginghams and taffetas, pure silk chiffons and nets are the principal fabrics, with a sheer silk rep used in her handsome beige suit made by Traina-Norell. A full length, white wool coat is her only heavy costume, and this sees double duty as an evening wrap for cool evenings. For current climate she uses huge pieces of tulle with her dinner frocks, throws them away when they become crushed and buys a few yards more.

The All-American Wardrobe

Her three evening dresses are above ankle length and made in cool, pastel colors to complement her short-cropped ash blond hair. There is a blue and white taffeta, called "Summer Storm," an iced green chiffon, and a misty rose under brown net.

For daytime wear her clothes are simple and effective, made with intricate little boleros and capes which she can wear in town, and toss aside for beach or country.

There are only two black frocks in her wardrobe, one by Adrian, which is suitable for luncheon in town; the other, a cocktail dress of crisp taffeta.

Mrs. Goetz buys all her clothes on this side of the Atlantic, believes our own designers are as great as those of Paris. Her current favorite is a "little Polish girl" named Marusia who is a rising star in the Hollywood fashion field. She likes Christian Dior, however, and has two cottons from his American collection.

At the end of a relatively short packing spree, Mrs. Goetz locked her two pieces of luggage. And despite the number of articles they held, it was not necessary to sit on the lids in order to close them. Undoubtedly, it's all in knowing how.

Harris & Ewing

STROLLING on Connecticut ave. in the midday sun, Mrs. Harry Goetz (the former Catherine Conner) of Hollywood, manages to look cool in a tissue sheer black and white checked gingham by Christian Dior. A tiny back bustle, black patent leather belt and a double row of buttons at the neckline are distinguished touches. A red straw sailor, white pique gloves and linen pumps complete the summertime ensemble

Miss Lucy Woolley Is Bride

The marriage of Miss Ducy de Graffenried Woolley, daughter of Robert W. Woolley and the late Mrs. Woolley, to Daniel Clarence List, took place yesterday at 1 p. m. at the home of the bride's father at the Dresden. The bridegroom is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Carter List of Wheeling, W. Va.

Only members of the immediate families were present at the ceremony which was performed by the Rev. Thomas Stone, assistant pastor of the National Presbyterian Church. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Marguerite Trenholm Woolley, as maid of honor, and Stuart List of Pittsburgh was his brother's best man.

Mrs. List is an illustrator for the publications of the National Education Association. A graduate of Gunston Hall School, she attended the National Academy of Design and the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. Mr. List, an engineer with the National Military Establishment, is a graduate of Shenandoah Valley Academy and of Cornell University. Following a wedding luncheon Mr. and Mrs. List left for an extended motor trip. They will be at home after August 15 at 6704 Hillandale rd., Chevy Chase, Md.

Mr. Woolley, father of the bride, was formerly director of the Mint and later a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission under President Woodrow Wilson.

Norton Goodwin To Entertain for Student Visitors

Norton Goodwin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, will entertain at a buffet supper this evening in the Goodwins' apartment at the Shoreham Hotel. The party is in honor of the 40 European students touring the United States under the auspices of the National Students Association and who are in Washington for 10 days. Among the countries represented are England, France, Sweden and the Netherlands.

Among the other guests who will be present at the supper party will be Miss Lucy Staton, Miss Mary Hope Hurley, Miss Barbara Davis, Miss Margery Saunders, Miss Judith Blair, Miss Ann Belser and Miss Jessie Butler, who are among the members of the entertainment committee for the visiting students.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin are at Blue Ridge Summit, Pa. On August 7 they will go to Newport, R. I., and will return to their apartment at the Shoreham in September.

Rehoboth Roundup

'Junior Miss America' Test To Pick Delaware Entry

By Virginia Cullen

Rehoboth Beach, Del., July 23.—This resort is sponsoring Delaware's "Junior Miss America" for the national contest. Out at the Rehoboth ball park next Saturday beauties from all over the State will go on parade in the preliminaries before a committee of judges headed by two Powers Models, Bobby Moore and Corrie Lee, cover girls of Red Book and Mademoiselle magazines. Finals have been set for August 6. This week the models have toured the State registering girls between the ages of 16 and 20. So far approximately 25 lovelies have been entered.

Winners of the State contest will be awarded a trophy by ball park officials, headed by Mayor Carleton B. Shaffer, ball club president. She will then compete in the Nation-wide beauty and talent pageant in West View Park in Pittsburgh, Pa., on August 10 and 11.

Interesting articles fashioned from sand-sculptured pieces of driftwood picked up on the beaches around Cape Henlopen, and from other beach flotsam in the way of shells and grasses, were featured Thursday in a "Beachcombers' Bazaar" at the Rehoboth Country Club. The bazaar followed the annual summer luncheon meeting of the Sussex Gardener's Club, and was attended by approximately 75 members and guests. The horticultural club is composed of a group of women from various towns in this vicinity, and this summer they have been concentrating on shadow-box shell and grasses pictures.

The sand dunes of Cape Henlopen within a stone's throw of Rehoboth Beach, have long been famous for remarkable specimens of "beach sculpture" carved by the sandy fingers of the constantly shifting dunes. They are exhibited untouched, in their natural forms that bear an uncanny likeness to birds, fishes, and even humans.

Miss Rita Kliensmith of Washington is one of the latest beach sculpture enthusiasts, having designed many arrangements from native beach collections during her weekend visits here. The Beachcombers' Bazaar and luncheon was in charge of the Lewes committee, headed by Mrs. William T. Atkins.

Edward L. Stock, jr., of Washington, will give a lecture next Wednesday before the newly organized garden group at the Art League. Considerable interest has been manifested in this new addition to the league's summer curriculum. Mr. Stock, who is owner of the Stock Nursery at Bethesda, Md., is a graduate of Cornell University with a wide horticultural experience. During the late war he was head of victory gardens in Montgomery County, Md. The garden course series is held each Wednesday morning in the new Corkran Studio.

Miss Laurence, William Wyant, Jr. Wed in Cathedral

Miss Carita Laurence and William Wyant, jr., were married yesterday in Bethlehem Chapel at the National Cathedral. The ceremony took place at 3 o'clock, and a reception followed at the bride's home in Georgetown. Officiating clergyman was Canon Crawford Brown.

John Waldo of Boston, Mass., escorted the bride. Miss Anastasia Thannhauser and Miss Joan Marble were bridesmaids. Joseph Wyant of Atlanta, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Richard Cull of Dayton, Ohio, and Maj. Warwick Boxall of Falls Church ushered.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Roger Laurence and the late Mr. Laurence of Los Angeles, Calif. She served at one time with the London Times Bureau and later at the Army Times.

Mr. Wyant is a correspondent of the Atlanta Journal. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Wyant of Atlanta, Ga.

MISS LAURA BELLE WYATT (seated) checks over some of the international music scores that will be played at the United Nations Club dinner dance this evening. With her are Miss Polly Norment and Maj. John Huba. Assisted by Austin Beales, they will be junior hosts and hostesses in the new series at the club

Miss Farrington Heads Dance Group

Miss Beverly Farrington, daughter of the Delegate from Hawaii and Mrs. Joseph Farrington is head of the junior host and hostess committee of the United Nations Sunday dinner-dance series which begins this evening. She is assisted by cochairmen, Miss Peggy Smith and Comdr. W. Bradlee Smith, chairman of summer activities.

Forty-two foreign students who are winding up their visit to Washington will be guests at the dinner-dance this evening. Hosts will be Maj. John Huba and Austin Beale, with Miss Laura Belle Wyatt and Miss Polly Norment as hostesses.

Members and their guests are reminded of the club's swimming party on Saturday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Calvert Bowie in Rockville, Md., as well as the movies of the year's swimming parties which will be shown at the club at 6 p. m. before the dinner dance.

Area Borzoi Club Discusses Plans For 3 Fall Shows

The Borzoi Club of Greater Washington met for cocktails last Sunday at Weathered Oak Farm, residence of Col. Frederick Jones-Davies. Among the guests were Mme. de Castelle, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Gross and Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Cook. Plans were discussed for three fall dog shows at which Col. Jones- Davies and Mme. de Castelle will present trophies.

Commonly known as Russian wolfhound, the Borzoi breed is owned by approximately 20 Washington area residents.

Top Recker
Interior Furnishings
Fabrics Accessories

ONE OF THE BEST ways we know to achieve individuality in your home without breaking the bank is the trick of combining a little of a fine fabric with a lot of an inexpensive one.

TOP RECKER has worked this trick in a number of ways—for instance covering the front of a wing chair in a handsome English hand-blocked linen at $16.00 a yard and the back in a harmonizing plain cotton at $2.00 a yard. Or setting a chair covered in the mouth-watering colors of a fine modern print such as Laverne's "Masks" against a perfectly plain, simple drapery which frames the chair as well as the window.

FOR upholstered furniture, Top Recker has a two-in-one idea—order your pieces covered not in muslin but in an inexpensive twill that costs little if any more than muslin. There are colors to fit almost any room, and the twill is handsome and durable enough to use in its own right. Then have slipcovers made in finer fabrics for winter use—the result is a change for winter and summer, and your room is dressed becomingly at all times.

IF THE BUDGET is your problem, you'll find that Top Recker knows a number of ways of keeping costs down without sacrificing taste and quality. Stop in to see these unusual fabrics—they will probably give you ideas of your own!

New Fabrics for Fall

Highlighting the fall fashion picture are fabrics which have undergone a revolution in consistency, reports the July issue of Charm, the magazine for the business girl. Wools and worsteds, for example, are now nearly as drifting and transparent, as weightless on the shoulders as chiffon.

Tweed, too, has gone soft. A new range of colors—forest green, brick red, mauve, even citron—complement tweed's delicate new textures.

There are elegant new iridescent brocades, shining satins on shantung, and puckered plisse crepes. Expect to see, after 5, velvet-feeling nylon-corduroys, velveteens patterned to look like thin silks, tissue-weight worsteds with the soft, soft "hand" of crepe de chine.

"Soaping" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

Halo—contains no soap or sticky oils—nothing to dull your hair's natural lustre. Made with a new patented ingredient, Halo reveals shimmering highlights with your very first shampoo! Its delightfully fragrant lather rinses away quickly in any kind of water—needs no after-rinse. For hair that's soft, lustrous, easy to manage—use Halo Shampoo! At any drug or cosmetic counter.

Not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

How to Use New Griddle Broiler

I recently purchased a heavy aluminum griddle-broiler, and should like directions for its use. First, does it need to be seasoned, and if so, how? secondly, please give directions for broiling steak on such a utensil. I am told that steaks so broiled retain their juices better than those broiled under a flame. Thirdly, can you give me a pancake recipe suitable for use with this griddle without greasing the latter? The demonstrator did not grease the griddle, but must have used a great deal of shortening in the batter.

A Reader.

Since there are several different kinds of table broilers on the market and you didn't mention which kind you have, my best suggestion as to whether it should be seasoned or not would be for you to refer to the directions which came with it. If you did not keep the booklet of directions it would be worth your while to secure one from the store where it was purchased.

To broil steaks on it, here again you should follow specific instructions which came with your broiler. Generally speaking, place the steaks on the rack, turn the broiler to low and broil for about six minutes on each side. The amount of time they cook will, of course, depend upon how done you like them. Before broiling, cut the outer fat edges of the steak so it will remain flat when heated. Also, it saves broiler cleaning if you cover the lower rack with aluminum foil turned up at the edges to catch the drippings. If you wish to use the drippings for gravy they can be poured off of the foil. When steak is almost done, dot it with butter and sprinkle with salt and pepper.

Here is a Griddle Cake recipe which should not stick if the iron is heated to full baking temperature before the batter is put onto it. If it sticks on the first cake or so, the griddle could be lighly greased a time or two.

Griddle Cakes

2 cups sifted all-purpose flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons shortening, melted
1 tablespoon sugar
1 or 2 eggs, well beaten
1½ cups milk

Mix soft and dry ingredients. Combine egg and milk; add flour mixture and beat only until smooth; add shortening. Bake on ungreased or lightly greased, hot griddle. For a thick cake, use 1 to 1 1/3 cups milk; do not overbeat batter. Approximate yield; 24 small griddle cakes.

Where in Washington or nearby can one find a scissors-grinder? H. G. K.

If you will look under "Barbers' Supplies" in the yellow pages of the telephone book you will find the names of at least two firms which sharpen scissors.

The cover of my pressure cooker has become badly stained from steam and water, leaving an extremely dull finish. I have tried silver polish and two tablespoons cream of tartar to a quart of water. Is there any other method you can suggest to restore the shining finish? The dull finish was caused by my inverting the cover and using it for a lid while I was using the pan for ordinary (not pressure) cooking. K. C. T.

You might try scouring the lid with a scratchless kitchen cleansing powder which has been moistened with vinegar. One way to apply it would be to dampen a soft cloth with vinegar, dip it into the cleansing powder and rub the cooker top.

I would suggest that in the future you use another cover when using the cooker for non-pressure cooking, for inverting the cover and subjecting the pressure gauge to steam and moisture is apt to ruin it. As a matter of fact as a safety precaution you should have the pressure gauge tested now before using it again as a pressure cooker. The dealer where you purchased the cooker will probably be able to tell you where to take or send it to have it tested.

Dr. Meta Glass, Mrs. F. P. Miller Are Honored

Dr. Meta Glass, president emeritus of Sweet Briar College, and Mrs. Helen Hill Miller, wife of Francis Pickens Miller, anti-Byrd candidate for Governor of Virginia, will share honors at a reception from 5 to 7 p. m. Monday at historic Gadsby's Tavern, in Alexandria, Va. The event, which is open to the public, will be sponsored by the Alexandria Women's Miller-for-Governor Group.

A sister of the late Carter Glass, Dr. Glass is State chairman of the Women's Miller-for-Governor Committee.

Mrs. D. Tucker Brown heads a committee planning the visit and reception for Dr. Glass and Mrs. Miller, which will be concluded Monday night with a radio address by Dr. Glass over Station WPIX, Alexandria.

Other members of the committee are Mrs. Kenneth Breeze, Mrs. Paul W. Cherington, Mrs. A. Remigus Lash, Mrs. Delos H. Smith, Mrs. Howard R. Tolley, Mrs. Warren H. Turner, jr., Mrs. Jay Waltz, Mrs. William E. Warne, Mrs. J. R. Boland, Mrs. Benton Boogher, Mrs. David Demarest Lloyd and Mrs. C. R. White.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JULY 24, 1949

Above, the first semidetached homes in Montgomery County. The project is Connecticut Avenue Estates, off Viers Mill rd. Kay Construction Co. plans to build 1200 homes, selling from $8995

'Beach Home Without Beach' Is Comment on Woods House

HOUSING EXPEDITER Tighe Woods' debut into the home building field, with a small one-bedroom "ramblerette" priced at $6000, plus land, has attracted pointed comments from prominent home builders here.

The project is strictly one of private enterprise on Woods' part and has nothing to do with his Government title or position. It was a private citizen's effort, done in off-hours, to stimulate similar low-cost home construction. No official "expediting" of houses, labor or material is involved. His office is concerned mainly with Rent Control Administration; not housing.

"Another confusing, amateurish splash into the building pond," commented Clark Daniel, local big-scale builder and vice president of the Home Builders Association.

"A beach house without a beach," reported James Pearson, executive secretary, Home Builders Association of Washington.

"An attractive little cottage of 550 square feet, but lack of a full kitchen and a second bedroom disqualifies it for FHA financing," remarked Frank Cortright, executive secretary, National Association of Home Builders.

Woods led newsmen, Government officials and home builders on tours last week of the pilot model home. It is located in a rural area off U. S. Highway No. 1, 25 miles from Washington, between Fort Belvoir and Quantico, Va.

Two homes are up, with several more planned. The small low-lying house is 14x36 and basically, has two rooms and bath. A 14x16 area has been designated the "living-dining-sleeping" quarters to qualify as a second bedroom.

WOODS

Woods told reporters he built the homes in hopes of showing builders there was a big demand for such small, low-cost houses, especially near military posts.

Daniel disagreed with Woods, pointing out the results of two experimental homes built by his association. A one-bedroom home, said Daniel, attracted only three buyers at $7000, including land and all costs. The two-bedroom home, however, attracted 23 buyers.

"The experiment answered for us the question of whether the public wants a one-bedroom house," he added. "The public would rather pay a little more and get more house.

"If a regular home builder had erected such a house as Woods has done, the press would have ignored him, and his colleagues would probably laugh in his face," Daniel continued.

"Several low-cost home projects under $9000 are planned here, but builders will not break them publicly until a model home is up for critical inspection, all costs are known and the homes be promised for delivery dates."

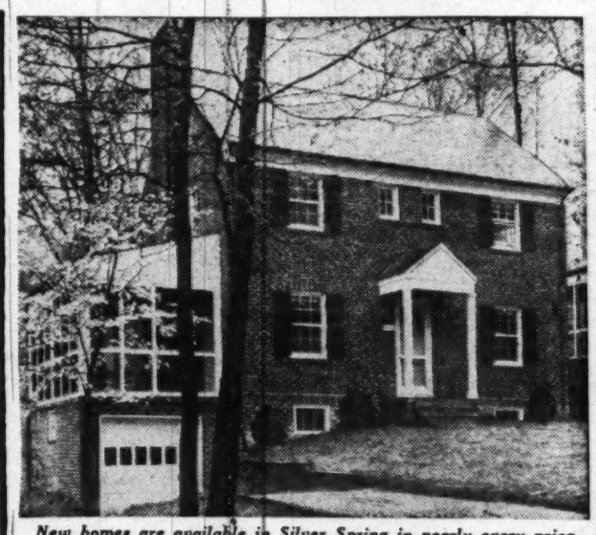
This is the new Silver Spring, Md., as officially defined by the Montgomery County Council at request of the Silver Spring Board of Trade. An estimated 71,500 persons live within the new borders, making it the second city of Maryland. Notice the new community embraces the entire Wheaton area.



New homes are available in Silver Spring in nearly every price (from $8990 and up), size and architectural style. This lovely colonial was built by Ervin & Reavis in Woodside Forest to sell for $25,500. It has 3 bedrooms, 2½ baths, complete kitchen, large wooded lot

Silver Spring Boasts Vast Housing Variety In New Subdivisions

By Conrad P. Harness

A TOUR of new homes in nearby Silver Spring, Md., leads one to believe that the population exists by building and selling homes to each other.

The casual visitor is almost overwhelmed by the scores of housing projects under way.

Projects range from a single home built for owner occupancy to huge, sprawling subdivisions of low-cost homes in the Wheaton area. Prospective home buyers can take their pick of new homes costing from $8900 on up. Silver Spring builders favor no one particular price range.

A tour of new home developments reveals such price tags as $8950, $9800, $10,950, $12,500, $13,750, $14,500, $15,750, $16,250, $17,500 and $19,750 and up. Down payments vary from zero to $5000.

Readers who plan a sigh-seeing trip of new homes can view the most by following the main road boundaries of the newly defined Silver Spring.

It was just last month that the community learned how big it was. The Montgomery County Council passed a bill defining its boundaries and supporting its claim to being Maryland's second largest city.

LATEST population estimate, courtesy of the Silver Spring Board of Trade, is 71,500. This is probably the first accurate estimate in the community's 105 years of life.

Here is a suggested route: Out 13th st. nw. to Piney Branch rd., out Piney Branch rd., left on Old Bladensburg rd., continue all the way to Wheaton, right on Georgia ave. extended to Glenmont; retrace your steps to Viers Mill rd., right on Viers Mill rd. and continue as far as Connecticut Avenue Estates; back to Georgia ave. extended and south to Colesville rd.; left and continue to Four Corners.

Anyone taking this jaunt will be exposed to new subdivisions with homes of all sizes, architectural styles and prices. There are still more new projects under way in the older sections nearer the business district that centers at Georgia ave. and Colesville rd.

Most projects are easily found since builders post signs at the highways pointing to their subdivisions.

City fathers are proud that Silver Spring is a community of homes, and that better type homes predominate. The Board of Trade

Home Builders Report Costs At Lowest Level in 4 Years

BUILDING costs are now at their lowest level in four years, the Home Builders Association reported yesterday in a statement urging prospective home owners to buy now before prices advance.

"The lowest possible level was reached June 1," the statement read. "On June 1, labor rates advanced 5 per cent. This will be reflected in costs.

"Taxes are advancing. Building materials, particularly lumber which sagged through the fall and winter, are stiffening in price and some materials such as roofing and cement, are in line for a distinct rise, due largely to the fourth round of labor advances in factories and mills."

The association said local builders have been using every new machine, mechanical device, economy and labor saving method and "every trick known to the trade to hammer down costs."

It complimented labor, saying it has rendered assistance by efficiency and in accepting many new methods, machines and processes.

"Household utilities such as heating plants, water heaters, ranges, refrigerators, washers, etc., were redesigned last year to meet lower costs. They have now reached a minimum and can only rise with advancing factory labor costs," the statement declared.

Firm to Iron Out Southpaw's Problems

Mansfield, Ohio, July 23 (U.P.).—The problems facing the left-handed housewife in ironing the family clothes soon will be solved.

The Westinghouse Electric Appliance Division here has announced it soon will have a left-handed iron on the market. The iron cord will lead out on the left-hand side instead of the right-hand side.

That, said R. Z. Sorenson, manager of the small appliance department of Westinghouse, will keep southpaws from becoming entangled in the cord.

Here is the controversial "ramblerette" erected by Federal Rent Director Tighe Woods in a private effort to stimulate construction of small homes. Located 25 miles from Washington, near Fort Belvoir, the home is 14 by 36 feet, has one bedroom, will sell for $6000, plus land. Local builders say they could build better homes for less money, but that the public doesn't want a one-bedroom house

The loan guarantee section of the local VA office said an appraisal committee had looked at the houses this week and a report would be rendered early next week. One official predicted the appraisal would be very near the $6750 price tag set by Woods. Profit to the builder was estimated at around $550 per house by the official.

Cortright's statement to the press regarding the Woods house said most lending institutions would not invest in housing of this type, situated at Fort Belvoir, 25 miles from Washington.

His statement added:

"The home is constructed on very low-cost land and the price should be low because of freedom from restrictive building codes and high labor costs. One prominent Washington builder estimated he could construct and sell the house in the same area for $800 less than $6750. Operative home builders throughout the country put less than 5 per cent of their construction into one-bedroom houses because of the lack of demand and inability to finance minimum structures."

estimated in 1946 that the "average" Silver Spring home fell in the $18,000-$20,000 bracket.

That average has fallen considerable, however, as a result of the hundreds of new and smaller homes built in the Wheaton area (and now part of Silver Spring) selling for less than $12,000.

Several builders operating there offer homes under $10,000 and at least two are selling their product for less than $9000.

SILVER Spring's rapid expansion can best be understood when one rides along a major highway viewing new homes by the dozen rising on one side, while a herd of cows chew their cud on farm land on the other side.

Statistically, building reports show that permits for 928 homes were issued the first six months of this year, contrasted with 1262 in the same period of last year.

During the entire year, permits were issued for 2162 homes with construction costs estimated at $18,341,053; 470 apartments at $2,870,000.

So far this year, permits for 1007 apartment units have been granted, with an estimated construction cost of $6,207,000.

The north-western boundary of Silver Spring along Viers Mill rd. is the scene of Montgomery County's first project of semi-detached houses. Kay Construction Co., developers of Indian Spring Club Estates, plans to erect 1200 units in the area known as Connecticut Avenue Estates.

The brick homes of five rooms and bath, full basement and tile bath, will sell for $8995, with no cash down payment by veterans. The developer has sufficient land to accommodate 4000 units, plus a large shopping center, schools and churches. The first group of 30 is now up for sale.

The veteran or nonveteran wage earner making less than $70 per week, and with no savings, is pretty much out in the cold as far as buying a new home in Silver Spring—as in nearly every other section of the metropolitan area. THE majority of homes inspected this week were planned to sell to financially substantial citizens, with savings sufficient to make a $4000 down payment on a $16,000 home. GI Bill purchases require smaller cash outlays.

But there are projects catering to veterans that offer homes at no down payment and monthly payments of $72. Prospective buyers are warned they must have an income of at least $3800 a year with no large outstanding indebtedness to qualify.

The vast majority of homes over $11,000 are all brick; those under are usually brick and frame, or asbestos shingle.

Buyers looking for long ramblers popularized in the slick magazines will be disappointed—they are scarce and high priced. On the other hand, there are scores of attractive brick bungalows.

Several developers still stick with the 2-story red brick of Colonial design—and find buyers. This particular house is selling for $13,000 to $16,000, according to size and location.

I saw no contemporary styled or "modernistic" homes, so common to such journals as the American Home, House Beautiful, Better Homes and Garden, etc. A smattering of Virginia builders are winning buyers and plaudits with this type of design, but in Silver Spring, such homes were noticeable by their absence.

Shopping facilities, transportation, schools and churches in the Silver Spring area are comparable to those found anywhere in the United States. Business leaders have insured buyer interest in the business district by providing both ample and free parking within easy walking distance of its main stores.

Public schools are located at the following sites:

ELEMENTARY: East Silver Spring on Silver Spring ave., Glenmont at Glenmont, North Four Corners on Old Bladensburg rd., Parkside at Burnette and Silkirk aves., Pine Crest at St. Lawrence and Woodmoor drs., and Oak View at East Wayne and Walden rd.

OTHERS: Silver Spring Intermediate School at Philadelphia and Chicago aves., Montgomery Hills Junior High at Seminary rd., and Montgomery Blair Senior High at 501 Dale dr.

Prospective home buyers eager to locate in the Washington area would do well to investigate the housing possibilities offered in this progressive community.

Arlington Building Shows '49 Decline

DOLLAR volume of construction in Arlington County during the fiscal year ended June 30 dropped nearly four million dollars from the 1947-48 totals. District of Columbia records show that the month of June recorded the staggering sum of $15,799,114, postwar high.

Andrew Jensen, Arlington County building inspector, reported his office during the fiscal year issued permits amounting to $22,185,451, as compared with $26,067,954 in 1947-48. The volume was considerably higher than the $17,277,931 recorded in 1946-47, however.

The breakdown for the three years shows:

Year.	Volume	Homes	Apts.
1949	$22,185,451	708	1920
1948	26,067,954	1107	1496
1947	17,277,931	926	938

An interesting sidelight on construction costs is revealed by the yearly reports. Estimated construction costs in 1947 per average home for which a permit was issued came to approximately $9750; in 1948, $12,150; and this fiscal year, $11,500.

The rise and fall of the cost averages results from both higher costs and higher priced housing erected in 1948, with a slight decline in building costs this year, coupled with a trend toward lower-cost housing according to size, design and location.

The June report of the District of Columbia Building Inspector's Office shows a dollar volume of $15,799,114, up more than 10 million dollars from May totals.

Biggest factor in the upward zoom was $9,639,000 for apartment houses, including a four-dillion-dollar project at 4201 Massachusetts ave. nw., to be built by Standard Construction Co. on the site of the old Villa Rosa estate.

Also increasing the total was a permit for Quebec House at 2800 Quebec st. nw., in rear of the Broadmoor Apartments on Connecticut ave. Estimated construction costs were put at $1,300,000.

Permits issued for private, single family homes totaled $972,450 for 95 homes, and $2,515,000 in new office structures. The record month compares with $4,230,000 issued in the same month of last year.

Tompkins Co. Awarded Apartment Contract

A contract for $1,030,000 to erect an eight-story, 122-unit elevator apartment at 1221-27 13th st. nw. has been awarded the Chas. H. Tompkins Co. by Frank Baldi, owner.

The project has an FHA mortgage insurance commitment for $1,030,000. Subbids are being taken on the project and construction is expected to start shortly.

Competition With U. S. To Keep Home Costs Up

CHICAGO, July 23.—The effect of the multibillion Government housing bill voted by Congress and just signed by President Truman will be to maintain high home-building costs in cities of over 300,000 population and to lessen the possibility of tax reductions, according to an article in the Review, monthly publication of the Society of Residential Appraisers.

The program will keep construction costs fairly close to present levels, since it will maintain a high volume of construction and give the building industry a new customer who doesn't worry about costs, the article said.

"The effect on private construction of new homes will be particularly severe if we continue in a recession pattern through 1951," it was said. "While the total cost of the program is considerably more, the immediate cash outlay for the construction of housing units over the next six years will be about eight billion dollars, including funds raised by the local housing authorities on their obligations.

"That, roughly, equals the total dollar volume of veterans loans made since 1944. The inflationary effects on building wages and material prices of such further expenditures by the Government are apparent. The larger the city, the more difficult will be the job of the private builder in producing a house that can be priced right."

Pointing out that the large volume of Government house construction under the new law will not begin until 1951, with the peak in 1952 and 1953, the article predicted the Government program would sustain total volume of home construction through 1955 at 700,000 units or more per year, extending the building boom. This volume will keep the building tradesmen busy, particularly in cities of 300,000 population and over, where most of the Government units will be built.

The program will reduce the number of buyers for homes priced at from $2500 to $6500, it was claimed. The 810,000 new Government units represent 20 per cent of the number of houses families with incomes of $1500 to $3000 would be expected to buy during the next six years.

"Most of the sales of these lower-prices homes are in small cities, which will get little Government housing, and only a small portion of the 810,000 families who will move into the new Government units would ordinarily buy homes, but the program is sizable enough adversely to affect the market for older, cheaper houses in many of the larger cities. On the other hand, it should have no appreciable effect during the next five years on the price or the turnover of $10,000 or more expensive houses.

"The Government housing program just approved will minimize the possibility of tax reductions and lessen the incentive for home ownership. As a result of the 1937 Housing Act, wartime, and this most recent legislation, we shall have by 1955 a total of 1,400,000 publicly owned and politically controlled dwelling units. If English experience is any guide, we shall then see the Government housing program expanded beyond even this—to the detriment of all residential real estate."

Correct Lighting Of Rooms Vital In Televiewing

SAFETY experts and eye specialists are concerned with the light control importance of televiewing rooms.

One headache creator for television fans is the table lamp which gives direct light at eye level, says C. Eugene Stephenson, member of the American Institute of Decorators. He suggests that lamps purchased in the future with television in mind should have indirect lighting globes or shades deep enough in color and opaqueness to throw the light below and above eye level. He adds:

"Television sets require a darkened area, but certainly not the hazards of a completely darkened room. Venetian blinds are an effective light control. They deflect daylight from the screen for afternoon viewing, yet direct light to the ceiling so that the room need not be too dark.

"Mirrors or ornaments that catch light and reflect it into the eyes should be moved. If the television screen is set into the wall against brightly patterned wallpapers, this also will compete strongly with the screen for attention."

Area's Venetian Blind Dealers Adopt Standards

The arena's organized Venetian blind dealers have adopted a set of standards as a protection to the buying public. All custom blinds manufactured by members of the Venetian Blind Association of Greater Washington that meet the standards can be identified by a seal on the blind.

Heretofore, an association spokesman said, the definition of custom-made blind has been entirely up to the discretion and judgment of individual dealers.

Other steps are planned to bring more benefits for the home builder and home purchaser, the association reported. An advertising program will be launched soon to inform the public about details of the new standards.

The English language is spoken today by more than 270 million people, of whom more than half are Americans.

Builders Break Record Here in Home 'Starts'

HOME BUILDING in the Washington area reached a new postwar peak in June when builders started 3170 new permanent dwelling units, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has announced.

This is an increase of 900 units over the May estimate, and exceeds by 1220 units the number started in June, 1948. The previous postwar peak occurred in May last year, when 3050 new dwelling units were started.

During the first six months of 1949 construction was begun on nearly 10,000 new dwelling units in the area, which is 16 per cent under the volume for the same period in 1948. Although home construction locally, as well as nationally, is less when compared with last year, the gap between 1948 and 1949 production is narrowing as the building season progresses.

Between the first and second quarters housing activity more than doubled in the Washington metropolitan area, as measured by the number of new units started. Last year the increase between the first and second quarters was 46 per cent.

The current local housing boom is the result largely of spectacular increases in apartment house construction, which accounted for 63 per cent of all new dwelling units started during the first half of 1949. Although one-family housing is showing seasonal increases, the volume is 28 per cent under that for the first half of 1948, while rental housing (units in two-or-more family structures) is within 7 per cent of last year's January-June total.

On the basis of building permits issued, it appears that additional substantial increases may be expected in the next month or two in the number of new rental units put under construction.

Fairfax County, followed closely by Prince Georges County, led other parts of the area in number of new dwelling units authorized during the first half of this year. They were followed by the District, Montgomery County, Arlington County and Alexandria. Apartment house construction predominated in all parts of the Washington metropolitan area except Montgomery County.

The construction cost of single-family houses, as reported by builders, average $9600 for the first six months of 1949, compared with $10,300 for those started in the same period of 1948. For multifamily projects, the average unit cost was estimated at $6500 this year. These averages are affected by changes in the size and type of project, and cost of materials.

Saves Boss Money; Modernizes House

Philadelphia, July 23.—Paying for home improvements is no problem for Ray Radcliff, 36. He just thinks up ways to help his employer do a better job—and gets extra cash for it.

Since November, 1947, Radcliff has averaged an extra $15 per week at SKF Industries, Inc., by suggesting ways for the ball and roller bearing firm to cut operating costs.

During the 17-month period the setup operator has earned $1,125 for four cost-cutting ideas. His latest cost-cutter is a lathe attachment that simplifies a machine operation for an estimated saving of $4000 a year. That idea netted him $650 for some further improvements to his suburban home.

Kitchen Layout Can Save Time

Few women realize it, but the 10 busiest years of their lives are spent in the kitchen. That is the accumulation of time needed over the years for such tasks as preparing foods, cooking, baking and washing dishes.

Modern equipment can shorten this kitchen life expectancy, but good layout of the kitchen itself is still the major factor, says a report by the Tile Council of America.

Adequate storage and work spaces head the time saving list. Location of equipment also plays an important role. Easily cleaned counter surfaces such as clay tile cut clean-up time and make the kitchen more pleasant.

Owners, 2500 Wisconsin, Inc., estimate construction cost at five million dollars and predict occupancy during the autumn of 1950. Waverly Taylor, Inc., is rental agent. Builder is Alvin L. Aubinoe, Inc., with Aubinoe, Edwards & Berry, architects. A building innovation will be a basement parking garage with radiant heated, snow-melting garage ramp

Building Costs Down in New York

New York, July 23 (AP).—State Housing Commissioner Herman T. Stichman reports that construction costs in New York State are dropping steadily.

He cited this evidence of the decline:

Newly received bids for four major contracts for a new State-financed public housing project in Utica, N. Y., show a 6 per cent drop below average bids received on five similar projects in the past year.

Previous bids received in the past year on five projects in Fulton, Schenectady, Troy and Binghamton showed a uniform downward trend in construction costs, he said.

Because of the trend, Stichman added, an effort is being made to speed the award of more building contracts throughout the State.

In the Utica bidding, he said the low offers on the four major contracts will provide a dwelling unit at a cost of $6918, which is $1042 less than the amount estimated in the budget.

200-Seat Dining Hall Planned for Seminary

Plans have been announced for a dining hall to seat 200 persons at the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary, on Seminary Hill, near Alexandria, Va. The building will be one story and basement, of brick construction. Davis, Wick, Rosengarten Co., Inc., of Washington is the probable builder.

For Sales and Appetite, Woo 'em With Color

By Cynthia Lowry

NEW YORK, July 23 (AP).—Here's a tip for those who would be successful salesman or cooks. Woo your prospects with color. So proclaims Howard Ketcham, an industrial design and color consultant, and he is talking to ladies who want to produce enjoyable meals as well as to businessmen who want to strike it rich.

KETCHAM

"Color," says Ketcham, "has a powerful influence on the subconscious. We know that people everywhere like an atmosphere of mental ease and a sense of well-being. And color, when it is considered a part of and as important as design, can achieve just this."

All sorts of experiments and surveys have proved Ketcham's claim. For instance, there was the cafeteria chain which wanted to improve its salad sales. Ketcham suggested replacing the usual white crockery with pale green plates. Sales went up over 100 per cent within a few days.

Orange Improved Oranges

A PHILADELPHIA fruit store was remodeling. Ketcham suggested—to the horror of the proprietor—painting the walls a bright shade of orange. But he did, and sales boomed.

"The orange color made the produce look appetizing," Ketcham said, "tying in nicely with the colors of the fruits and vegeables. It made them look even better under the store's incandescent illumination."

"And don't think that the general public doesn't like a handsome, colorful package.

"We have proved it time and again by taking some inferior candy and some expensive candy, switching the boxes and making a taste survey," he said. "And every time the tasters will proclaim the best candy is the cheap stuff we've put in the expensive box."

Light does strange things to color, and so do chemical processes. One of the big railroads installed fluorescent lighting—blue variety—in some of their dining cars. They were immediately deluged with complaints about their coffee. That was simple: the blue light made the coffee look weak and gray—and the public was tasting coffee with its eyesight.

Tasty to Tongue Only

ANOTHER large corporation installed an electronic device for cooking steaks fast and with all the meat juices sealed in. It tasted delicious—but the steaks came out of the broiler looking gray. No one enjoyed the steaks and they had a fearful time selling them. Color again.

Still another retail grocery store wondered why its own name-brand packaged products didn't move as fast as competitors'. Ketcham dropped in for a look, and the owner proudly told him his were the only products packaged in black.

"He thought he really had something wonderful," the color engineer explained, "but the reason no one else was using black—and the reason his stuff wasn't selling—was because the color made the package look smaller, heavier and was less conspicuous."

Dealing with color preferences, however, is a tricky business. For instance, red-handled toothbrushes sell fastest in the low priced field. But when toothbrushes are high priced, people prefer amber handles.

In good years, Ketcham says, people buy automobiles of bright colors. In depression years, sales of brightly hued cars drop, and black and dark blues come up.

New World Near

KETCHAM is convinced that when it comes to food stores, there's a brave new world of gay color in the offing. A postwar survey showed four of every 10 grocery purchases were made on impluse—and that this dropped to three out of ten as prices grew higher. Food mechants began to worry about ways of giving that impulse an assist.

"A lot of stores tried better lighting—and some went so far that the light glare literally drove the customers out," Ketcham said. "But what they needed was bright and cheery colors—instead of neutral grays—colors carefully chosen to make food and packages look more attractive."

The pigment payoff, however, is the big cigarette company which pulled the principal color, green, out of its distinctive package. Ketcham says many women smokers eschewed the brand because the deep color of the package didn't blend happily with many of the clothes they wore. Anyway, says he, sales went up among women after the package was primarily white and red.

There's practicaly nothing, he maintains, that you can't accomplish with or without color—if you know what you're doing.

Hints Given On Tests in Buying House

MAMARONECK, N. Y., July 23 (U.P.).—A person should choose his home with as much care as he uses in selecting a mate, Realtor Peter Doern advises.

Doern, treasurer of the Westchester County Realty Board, said there are some couples that don't examine a house carefully enough before they invest their life savings. He suggested that any house hunter examine a dwelling from basement to rafters, so that he will know just what he is getting.

Here are some of the things that Doern suggested a person should do:

1. To make sure that the floors are solidly constructed, walk to the middle of each room, stand on the balls of both feet, and then come down hard on the heels. If you get a solid bump, the floor is holding up all right. But if the floor gives a little, it needs new girders to hold it in place.

2. Settling floors can be detected by looking for cracks in the plaster by the floor boards and the possibility that the floors might be pulling down the floor boards.

3. To check the plaster, pound the walls with your fists. If they are dry walls (plaster board) the pounding will make a hollow noise. Defects in the lath and plaster walls can be detected by thumping and prodding. If they buckle, the plaster probably has come loose from the laths.

Ceilings may be tested the same way.

Obtain Expert Aid

4. TO TEST the plumbing, turn on all the faucets in a bathroom and flush the toilet at the same time. If the tap force is reduced to a trickle, the pipes may be old and filled with rust.

5. If you are doubtful about the electric wiring, furnace and hot-water heat, call in a plumber and electrician to test them.

6. To check on termites, take a screw driver or penknife to the basement and prod the wooden beams closest to the earth. If the wood is just dented a bit, it is all right. But if it is soft, either dry rot or termites may have set in.

"People should investigate every house thoroughly before buying," Doern said. "They should choose the location first, then the architecture and layout. A house shouldn't be chosen too quickly."

Tips on Cleaning Washable Wallpap

An inexpensive and effective way to clean washable wallpaper is to wash it with a suds of mild soap and water. Apply clean cold water to an area slightly larger than that which is to be cleaned. Then apply the suds with a sponge, rubbing it gently over the paper. Remove suds with a clean, damp sponge and proceed to the next area.

Time will be saved while washing wallpaper if two pails are used to hold the necessary water. One pail may be used for the soap suds and the other for rinse water. Thus, there will be no need to run back and forth to the kitchen sink for water.

For an inexpensive and efficient fire fighting aid, hang a pail full of sand on the back porch. It will provide a quick way to extinguish grease fires on the kitchen range.

2-Story Brick Homes Planned for Woodlawn

Eleven two-story brick homes will be erected in the 7100 block of Greenvale Parkway, in the Woodlawn sections of Prince Georges County, Md., according to present plans of Lerner Homes Corp., builder, and Gelman Homes Corp., owner.

New Maryland Plant

Cedarhurst, Md., July 23.—A waste-disposal plant being built at the Schenley Distillers, Inc., unit here is the sixteenth such plant to be constructed by the company in a $3,500,000 program to combat stream pollution. Water returned to the Patapsco River has 99.9 per cent of all distilling waste removed.

Construction Awards Dip 17 Pct. in Week

New York, July 23 (AP).—Civil engineering construction awards totaled $158,751,000 in the five-day week ending Thursday, a drop of 17 per cent under $190,346,000 in the preceding five-day week, Engineering News-Record reported today.

Awards were 15 per cent below the average for the previous four weeks, although they represented an increase of 11 per cent over $143,213,000 reported in the like week of 1948, the publication said.

Elizabeth, Philip Settle Down In Modernized, 4-Story 'Castle'

LONDON, July 23 (U.P.).—Princess Elizabeth, heir to the throne, and her husband Prince Philip are settling down in their first real home, a four-story house which has every convenience that a gadget-minded American housewife might dream of.

There are all sorts of kitchen ventilators to keep the smell of boiling brussels sprouts out of the living quarters. There is a battery of pressure cookers, a refrigerator that makes 20 pounds of ice at a time. In Philip's dressing room his civilian clothes, his uniforms and his dress clothes pop out of their three wardrobes at the touch of an electric button.

There is a private movie room near the kitchen in the basement, in addition to a big television set upstairs.

Baby Prince Charles, 8 months old, has a four-room-and-bath suite for his nursery.

Clarence House, the new home of the royal couple, is just down the way from Buckingham Palace. It cost $240,000 to remodel it to the designs of the Princess and her husband.

You enter a dark wooden gate, and pass a suspicious sentry, to gain entrance.

On the ground floor are the official reception rooms, luxuriously carpeted, furnished in satinwood and antique furniture. The walls are hung with Adam mirrors and George III bracket lights. The drapes are in fawn, beige and cream-colored heavy rayon tapestry in a traditional leaf design. A vast, high-ceilinged library with deep upholstered settees and armchairs lies between two of the state rooms.

Up the mahogany-banistered stairs are the bedroom suites of Elizabeth and Philip, with their connecting doors.

Elizabeth's bedroom is completely feminine, with soft peach draperies and tinted sheets and blankets. The hangings are of red rose and cream in heavy satin.

On the dressing table is a $4000 dressing table set, the wedding gift of the Diplomatic Corps.

The bathroom is tiled in cream and white in contrast to Philip's pale green bath, mirrored and equipped with dozens of silver gadgets.

Philip, a naval officer, picked a divan bed and 13 pieces of Regency furniture for his 28-by-17-feet bedroom. His dressing room is laid out like a naval officer's shipboard cabin. His study is lined with waxed Canadian maplewood, gift of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. There is a small room containing a cocktail cabinet and a sherry bar.

A few doors away is Elizabeth's personal sitting room where she will hold her afternoon tea parties. It has a piano.

Guest bedrooms are on the same floor.

Baby Charles's day nursery is done in primrose yellow, his night nursery in white and pale blue. Gaily colored animals decorate the walls.

There are 12 rooms on the top floor. Bedrooms for the personal staff of the royal couple, including the baby's personal footman, 14-year-old Michael.

To top off things, there is a giant safe to keep Princess Elizabeth's jewelry.

It sounds as if the royal residence is ornate. But court circles say it will be the most economically run home ever occupied by an heir to the royal throne.

Wash Windows The Easy Way

Window washing is dreaded by home owners and apartment dwellers alike. Yet, if convenient equipment is used, it can be one of the simplest of routine household chores.

Home economists say that the easiest way to keep windows sparkling is to use the same tools professional window washers use. These include a small squeegee, a sponge and a lightweight galvanized steel pail.

Fill the pail about half full of an ammonia and water solution. About 4 tablespoons of ammonia will do. Dip the sponge into the solution and rub it over the window pane. Then wipe off the pane with a few quick strokes of the squeegee.

This procedure takes only a few minutes and results in window glass which radiates with cleanliness.

More than 23 million youngsters from 5 to 17 are enrolled in United States public schools.

Save Room in Garden For Strawberry Patch

By James H. Beattie

THERE is a place in the small garden for some of the small fruits, particularly strawberries. Only a medium-sized space is required for a large yield, and the culture of the plant is a relatively simple matter. Like many other garden products, the strawberry is at its best only when fully vine-ripened and served fresh. The fresh taste may be enjoyed for months by storing the fruit in the home freezer.

Early spring planting is required for a maximum crop during the season, but the plants may be set in Wasshington gardens at any time until the middle of August. There's one distinct advantage, easier weed control, for the late-set plants. Garden space from which an early crop such as potatoes has been removed often presents an excellent opportunity for planting strawberries.

Almost any fertile, well-drained soil will produce a fine crop of strawberries, but light-textured land is usually best.

If planted on land that was occupied for the first part of the season by some other crop that was liberally fertilized, no additional commercial fertilizer should be required for the remainder of this season. The fruit buds for next season's berries, however, are formed during the latter portion of the summer and no chances should be taken about a liberal supply of plant food in the soil. We feel that it is usually a good plan to supply some additional fertilizer after the plants have become well established.

Mixtures Prescribed

AFTER the harvest season, the strawberry planting should be liberally fertilized, using a 5-10-5 commercial mixture at rates of from 6 to 10 pounds to each 100 feet of strawberry row, with the rows spaced four feet apart. When the plants are set in beds, about two pounds of the fertilizer to each 100 square feet of space is usually sufficient. The use of a brand of fertilizer that contains the so-called rare elements, copper, zinc, manganese, etc., or the reinforcement of a standard mixture with the prepared combinations of the rare elements is usually advisable.

During early spring, commercial strawberry plants are easily obtained. At this mid-summer season, it is usually possible to get potted plants, particularly those of the everbearing varieties, or to lift plants from existing beds and reset them in the new location. This same plan, in slightly modified form, may be followed when obtaining the plants from another location possibly miles away, by lifting the plants with large balls of soil, placing these in shallow boxes and conveying them to the new location. Young, vigorous, well-rooted plants should be selected, avoiding old crowns from last seasons growth.

The wide prevalence of virus diseases in strawberries makes it particularly desirable to use only healthy planting stock. The plan suggested in the last paragraph does much to accomplish this purpose.

Don't Crowd the Plants

BECAUSE of their habit of sending out runners, which root and form new plants every few inches, strawberries are liable to become too crowded. A common and satisfactory method of planting consists in setting the plants about 18 inches apart in 4-foot rows. The runners are allowed to fill the spaces between the mother plants until about three new plants have been formed from each mother plant after which the runners are removed as they form.

Strawberry plants should be set at such a height that the crowns will not be covered with soil by rains or when cultivated, but not so high that the roots will be exposed.

Strawberries can't fight weeds and produce an abundant crop of high-grade fruit. Frequent cultivation of the spaces between the rows and the plants accompanied by sufficient hand work to remove hard to get weeds and surplus runners, is a necessary part of the work. Even when it is kept weed-free, it seldom pays to leave a strawberry planting for more than two seasons. Those having a patch containing satisfactory strawberry varieties find it a simple matter to shift vigorous plants to a new location and destroy the old planting.

In cases where one can obtain healthy plants of satisfactory varieties from nearby plantings, it is usually best to use these and avoid the danger of introducing diseased plants. Blakemore, Fairfax, Howard 17, Gandy, Chesapeake and Joe are old time-tried varieties that do well. Maytime, Midland, early; Starbright and Fairpeak, mid-season, and Redstar, late, are some of the excellent newer varieties.

Let's Get Down to Earth

Be Cool in This Colonial Garden Lounge!

By Henry B. Aul

WHILE water-cooled walls and rope and pulley controlled awnings are pleasing innovations of the modern or contemporary garden lounge designed for comfortable summer living, they have their antecedents in features associated with Colonial, Victorian and other traditional garden architecture. The wall fountain and pool, the vine-covered arbor and the shuttered wall are features that have been used successfully for many years to bring cool comfort to the garden sitting room.

The garden lounge shown in plan and perspective in the accompanying illustration is closely connected to a small colonial home. It is reached directly from the porch, an arrangement that is particularly workable in our variable summer climate and it utilizes side yard space for fountain wall and a background planting that frequently is wasted in small property development.

Enjoy the View

BY SWINGING the brick wall diagonally away from the corner of the porch, the terrace is made spacious close to the porch and the pool can be seen and enjoyed from both the terrace and the porch. Since this 6-foot wall is actually formed of bricks filled in between the 4-by-4-inch upright arbor posts, it can be built just one brick thick.

The bottoms of the arbor posts are treated with Cuprinol and set in concrete that reaches below the frost line. The foundation for the wall must also be extended below the frost line.

The pool is a 3½-by-8-foot brick-coped rectangle fed with the overflow from a semicircular wall basin which in turn, receives water from a lead wall spout above it. The basin has a 2-foot radius. The spout is centered in the wall 4 feet above the paving with the semicircular basin 18 inches below it and the bottom pool 18 inches above it, or 12 inches above the paving.

City Water

BOTH pools are brick lined with waterproof concrete and both are 12 inches deep. The semi-circular basin has three copper or lead-lined openings in its coping to permit the water to spill into the bottom pool. The lead wall spout can be replaced with an ornamental fountainhead if desired. It is connected with the regular water supply and controlled by a shut-off valve or with a small circulating pump that will use the same water over and over.

The pump could be housed in a box between the shrubs back of the wall. A combination drain and overflow in the bottom pool is piped to the storm sewer or a dry well.

It is the sight and sound of the water pouring from the wall spout into the wall basin and thence into the bottom pool, added to the brick wall and coping, that help to make this a cool terrace retreat. The arbor rafters covered with the thick foliage of grape vines and the shuttered wall along the end of the terrace contribute to this comfort.

ARBOR rafters are two-by-fours spaced 4 feet apart on the 2-by-6-inch plates that are notched into the post tops. One-by-3-inch scantlings are spaced 12 inches apart above the rafters. Corners are chamfered on the 4-by-4 posts along the front of the arbor to give them a light effect.

The effect of a shutter wall along the end of the terrace is gained with ¾ by 1¼-inch slats spaced one-half inch apart and set at a 45-degree angle. These louvers permit air to circulate but cut down on sunlight from that direction and afford privacy on the terrace.

Tuberous begonias and fancy-leaved caladiums are bedded in the narrow border at the base of the shutters; dwarf yew are used as accents each side of the pool and assorted evergreen and deciduous plants are used for background planting behind the fountain wall, and where the garden border stops against the terrace paving.

The paving is cut flagstone to contrast with the brick in the wall and pool copings. Shutters, arbor posts and rafters are painted white. This part-shady, part-sunny terrace lounge permits its occupants a good view of the lawn and garden throughout many months of the year. It transforms an ordinary side yard into a garden approach that has appealing attractiveness.

Pruning Helps Produce Tomatoes

PRUNING tomato plants that are grown to a single stem and staked will keep a gardener busy. Pruning requires that side shoots or branches that grow from the main stem be removed. Unless removed before they are 4 inches long, the vigor of the plant may be reduced by the operation.

On a vigorous plant, it often seems that a shoot will grow that long overnight. Moreover, shoots appear near the base of the plant long after you think there is nothing to worry about there; and these low shoots make the worst trouble. A daily examination, and pinching out of shoots just as they start, is the best way to handle this task.

Pinching is better than cutting with a knife. The knife is more likely to carry disease infection. Before pinching off shoots, wash your hands thoroughly and do not smoke or touch tobacco while handling tomatoes, because there is a tobacco disease that may be transmitted to your tomato plants if you are careless.

For single-stem plants, all side shoots must be removed. For double-stem plants, one side shoot not more than 10 inches above the surface may be allowed to grow. From this shoot, however, all side shoots must be removed just as from the main stem.

Tomatoes are not naturally climbers, but sprawlers. They will not cling to anything, but need to be tied. Every time you prune, be prepared to tie up new growth, using a strip of cloth, soft thick twine, or similar tie, which will not cut the stem. The tie should be looped loosely around the stem and fastened securely to the support. A single-stem plant can be twisted around a strong cord or heavy wire.

Do not remove leaves from a tomato plant, to expose the fruit to direct rays of the sun. This will cause sunburn.

Southern Shrubs

D. C. Is Borderline For Mimosa, Althea

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

LATE July and early August are times for real garden enjoyment. Most garden chores are completed—the annuals have been transplanted and the perennials which bloom at this time are hardy and need little care.

There are a few garden jobs requiring immediate attention. Iris, of course, can be reset, but they will stand a little waiting. Some tall perennials will have to be staked and tied and it is a good time to give the chrysanthemums a second pinching back. Fall asters also benefit from pinching back and will form a more compact bush. If some of the tips of perennial phlox are removed, the bloom on that stalk will be delayed, thus giving a longer season of bloom.

Otherwise, this can be a lazy time in the flower garden with time out to enjoy, with an easy conscience, the beauty one has helped create, to read a new book or to look over the flower catalogues and check bulbs and other things which should be ordered soon. Some excellent values are being offered by nurserymen.

Mimosa Is Popular

THERE are many things in bloom now which many of our newer residents do not recognize. Washington is the borderline for many Southern plants and trees. Among them is the mimosa which has had an unusually good year. This tree, which has increased in popularity in this section in the last decade, has fernlike foliage and pink or cream blooms like bits of fluff. It puts out many seedlings. A year or so ago a blight disturbed them, but they seem to have overcome this difficulty.

A shrub which is giving a good performance now is the abelia. It is seen frequently here, used generally as a hedge plant. Its charming small pink blossoms appear in early July and last for weeks. The glossy foliage makes it an attractive plant throughout the season. It is inexpensive, hardy and once established needs little attention besides feeding and clipping.

Tall, lovely and bringing a new note into the garden is the vitex mychrophylla. This is seen in many local parks, but seldom in home gardens. The foliage is fragrant when crushed. Grey-green in color, it is a fine background for the large lavender blue spikes of bloom which appear in early July. Vitex will grow in almost any soil. It is easily grown from cuttings.

Crepe myrtle is another lovely plant which has Washington as its northern border for growing. It will often winter-kill, and like the vitex, should be planted behind other shrubs which will fill the gap when this happens. If one has space, it is well worth trying.

Grown From Cuttings

BUTTERFLY BUSH or buddleia has become one of the most popular of summer blossoming shrubs, although one of the newer introductions. It was first brought from China in 1869. Since its introduction it has not only increased in size but is obtainable in many lovely colors. American horticulturists have featured it so widely that it now is found in a majority of American gardens.

In the North it will winter-kill but here it needs to be restrained, as it is a very strong grower. Many gardeners like to cut it back to the ground each year. If this is done the blooms will be finer and the new shoots will reach a height of from 8 to 10 feet in a season. It is easily grown from cuttings and these started in early spring will bloom the first year.

Among the newer varieties which have achieved popularity are Dubonnet, of true Dubonnet color, and another with deep coloring, the Ile de France, whose flowers are of deepest purple. Both are effective as cut flowers. Charming is a pink of great merit. If one wishes fall bloom it can be had by pinching off the first flower buds in July.

A favorite in old world gardens, and still retaining its popularity, is the Althea or Rose of Sharon. This plant, also from China, was brought to Europe before 1600 and was known in America as early as 1790. It comes in both single and double varieties. The single have more distinction and are generally more popular. The white and pale pink varieties add great charm to the midsummer garden. While they have many seedlings it is well to purchase new plants from a nurseryman as seedlings are apt to be magenta.

One of the oldest varieties and still one of the best is "Totus Albus," a white. While Althea will reach a height of 15 feet or more and adds beauty to informal gardens it is valuable as a clipped hedge plant and is used frequently in this manner.

Dividing Hardy Primroses

The time to divide hardy primroses is shortly after they have finished their flower display around this time of the year. Take up the clumps and pull them apart carefully so that each crown has a good root system. Replant without delay and give a thorough soaking. Keep shaded for a week or longer unless there is a rainy spell.

cost of housing to himself until next Sunday. But Mr. Vinson gave it all away by announcing he would inspect the house, and invited other committee members to go with him.

"I cannot see why row houses, of medium size and built on Government land, should cost so much," Mr. Vinson said after seeing plans for Mr. Woods' house.

The modern-style home measures fifteen feet by thirty-eight feet, and has a wood frame with redwood siding outside and plywood paneling for inside walls. Its design provides facilities for sleeping in the living room as well as the one bedroom. Another bedroom can be added.

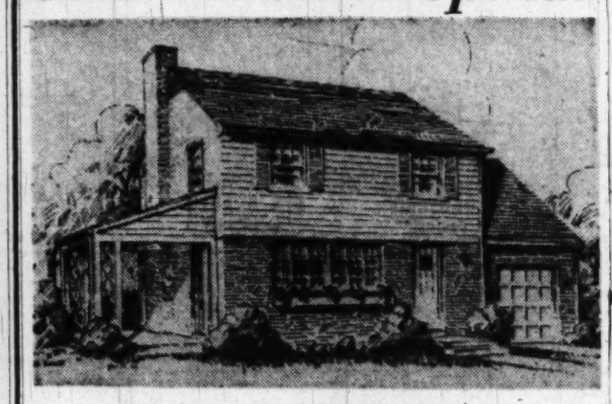
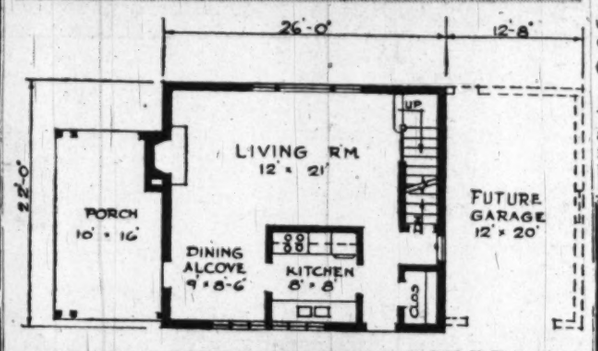
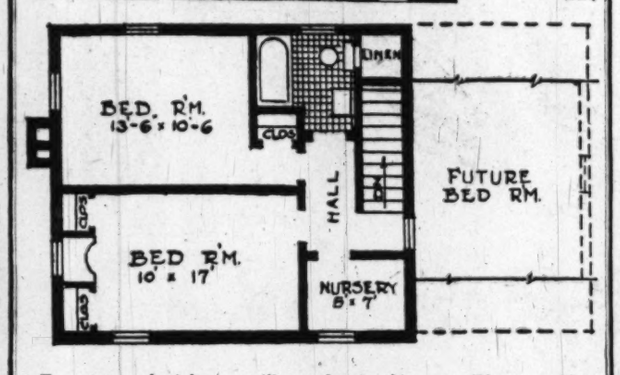
Colonial Still Popular







Two-story colonials are still popular in this area. They provide maximum house at minimum costs. This design by Architect Earl B. Bailey of Falls Church, Va., provides for future addition of a third bedroom and garage. Estimated construction cost of the basic house, not including land, was put at less than $10,000 by Bailey. With the garage and porch added, the cost would go to about $12,000. Recommended exterior is of brick and clapboard siding

Home Buyer's Guide

THE housewife who frets about her household dusting problem may be interested to learn that lint is by far the greatest air-borne dust nuisance within the home. The truth of this fact will be affirmed by any owner of a warm air winter air conditioning system who has seen the mass of lint collected by his furnace filter from the indoor air which has circulated through the system.

Rugs, clothing, bedding, upholstered furniture—even the dust rag which the housewife uses when dusting—all contribute minute particles of lint fibers which float through the air and eventually settle on floors and furniture surfaces throughout the house.

Through the use of air filters in the modern warm air winter air conditioning system, lint, together with air-borne dust, dirt and pollens, are removed from the air circulated within the home. Clean air saves work and money, too, in decreased washing, cleaning and replacement of furnishings. Hay fever victims and others who suffer from asthmatic allergies can particularly appreciate the relief that comes from clean, pollen-and-lint-free air.

Heating system air filters should be inspected at least once every six months, advises the National Warm Air Heating and Air Conditioning Association. Disposable type filters should be changed, or washable type filters should be cleaned, when they are heavily loaded with lint and dust. Clogged filters restrict freedom of air circulation and may cause furnace overheating.

Two new plumbing conveniences for the home were among the many projects shown at the recent 1949 Home Comfort Exposition in Cleveland, according to the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau.

One is a lavatory dressing table combination for bedrooms or dressing rooms. The lavatory, measuring 20 by 13 inches, is fitted into a streamlined vanity or custom-built counter-top. This counter-top is made of impervious plastic which will resist acids, cigarette burns, and any type of stain. The lavatory with two flanking cabinets is 5 feet long.

Available in white or a choice of colors, the lavatory features a deep, generous bowl, wide, protective splash rims, two integral soap dishes, and fittings in a gleaming, nontarnishing finish of chromium-plated brass. It is a modern lavatory that introduces maximum flexibility into bath and powder room arrangements.

Second of the plumbing innovations is the shower mixing valve. Instead of two handles to regulate the water, one hot and one cold, shower fanciers may now use a single handle to tune in the correct temperature quickly. There is a saving of water, too, since the mixer makes the most effective use of hot and cold water to eliminate waste.

To protect against scalding, the mixing valve has a hot water stop to maintain a predetermined maximum temperature, if the hot and cold water supplies are kept constant.

To bring further economy to the bathroom, there are new showerheads which clean themselves. A turn of the lever attached to the showerhead not only gives a variation in shower spray, but also removes any accumulated sediment that might clog up the showerhead holes.

Grading Bids to Open For Arlington School

Bids will be asked soon on the preliminary preparation of the site for the Vacation Lane Junior High School in Arlington, Va. The project involves cutting, grading, clearing, grubbing and installing storm drainage.

Brick Homes Planned

Plans for nine 2-story brick homes to be erected at 5101 to 5121 H st. se., were announced last week in a building permit application filed by Eli Busada, owner and builder.

In Baltimore 'Refractory'

Bricks 'Tortured' to Find The Best for Hot Furnaces

BALTIMORE, July 23 (AP).—Subjecting a genteel sort of brick to ordeal by fire, pressure and almost everything else is the full-time job of a new research laboratory here.

The lab, with its controlled inferno of furnaces, is operated by General Refractories Co. of Philadelphia.

Opening the lab doors to trade and technical writers at a recent dedication, company officials bemoaned the fact that few people know what a refractory is.

It has "always been relatively unpublicized, unsung and unheard of," it was pointed out.

Can Resist Heat

A REFRACTORY, then, is a brick—not the ordinary, or alley cat variety, but a de luxe item which gets its imposing name because of ability to resist high temperature and chemical reactions.

By virtue of these talents, refractories are used to line furnaces. They are fundamental to steel production. Developments in one field directly affect the other.

GREFCO engineers declare:

"Virtually every processed material of modern civilization—iron, steel, oil, glass, fabrics, chemicals, generated power—owes its existence in workable form to refractors that lack the surface glamour that characterizes the very industries they serve."

Indeed, they go on, "it can truly be said that industrial progress has traveled so fast and so far largely because of the vast utility of this unheralded industry, which probably ranks second to agriculture in basic necessity."

Refractories as dealt with by GREFCO include not only the almost heatproof bricks, but cement and mortar, too.

Industry's constant demand for lower production costs and better materials to withstand higher temperatures and frictions is a main reason why the new lab was built.

It is, GREFCO reports proudly, "far in advance of anything of its kind in the industry."

Youth and Sunshine

EDDIE DOWLING, star of the Meridian Hill's new bill, is being toasted in absentia during this rehearsal moment by Dancer Eddie Garr, Joe Chalzel and Patricia Coates

MERIDIAN MID-DAY: With its nights filled with performances, the new stage in Meridian Hill Park sees daily daylight rehearsals. Getting ready for tomorrow night's opening of "The Time of Your Life" are Lois Hall, Joe Sullivan and Joseph Foley, the chap in the door. Tonight at Meridian Hill, Buster Keaton will be winding up his week's stay in "Three Men on a Horse"

GOOD YOUNG SUMMERTIME: Judy Garland and Van Johnson star in the Capitol's incoming Technicolor musical, "In the Good Old Summertime," but their relaxed comfort suggests "young," not "old"

June Haver will be playing Marilyn Miller in the Warner's musical, "Look for the Silver Lining," opening Thursday

'Hamlet' Wins High Acclaim Of GIs Serving in Germany

By Richard L. Coe

IN THE WHITE and rose-colored Wiesbaden Opera House a few weeks ago you could have heard a pin drop. The packed auditorium was largely occupied by American soldiers whose average age was between 20 and 21. They were watching an American-made production of "Hamlet."

The mature officers of these youthful Yanks were on the anxious side, for this was an experiment. Entertainers from home had appeared for the troops before, but they were of the sort generally described as "popular," the movies' Bob Hope, radio's quizzical Bob Hawk, vaudeville's Sibyl Bowan, the theater's sometime daughter Constance Bennett playing a light comedy, "Over 21."

But "Hamlet" was something else again. Wasn't it supposed to be "arty," "cultural," "highbrow"? That was what made this entertainment from the U.S.A. something different. Would these lads, who had been in their early jive period when the war came, cotton to classics which had, if anything, only a musty, classroom memory?

It Was a Hit

COTTON to it they did. Instead of empty seats, all were filled. Instead of an intermission retreat to quarters, everyone stayed put. And at the end they stayed on to demand curtain calls of the cast, give a rousing ovation.

The Air Force, sponsoring the event here and in five other troop centers, passed out questionnaires and virtually 100 per cent of those returned asked that plays of similar caliber be presented in the future. They were not reflecting on the genuinely appreciated visitors of the past, but they were decidedly asking that some thought be given to these lasting pleasures of a fine art.

Lieut. Gen. John K. Cannon, commanding the United States Air Force in Europe, puts it succinctly: "I have heard Armed Forces personnel stationed here for sometime say that this production was the finest entertainment they have had to date."

He goes on: "That other productions of high caliber, if presented with the acumen used in preparing 'Hamlet', are needed and wanted there is not a doubt.

Lesson to Germans

"OVER and above the reception from the troops, and very important indeed, is the effect on the German civil population. The Germans begin to understand that America is not devoted solely to better plumbing and more chewing gum, but that it also has artistic vitality and creativeness. We Americans have been all too reticent about our own cultural accomplishments, bowing before those of the European continent."

The general's words are much to the point. As a wartime enlisted man I shudderingly recall the insistence that the classics which have outlived several generations were "too good for the men." Only by over-riding the top brass did Katharine Cornell make her sensationally successful tour of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" in Europe, Maurice Evans present his phenomenal "G.I. Hamlet." Legs and gags were viewed as the general limit of soldier entertainment.

It was forgotten that soldiers are also civilians and it is being forgotten that these sprouts of ours in Europe will one day be the Nation's oaks. While it seems inconceivable that endless negotiations preceded this American "Hamlet" tour among our bases in Europe, for a while on the lower and middle levels it was touch and go—"The men don't want 'Hamlet'," I heard one captain growl.

But as General Cannon has since written "the tremendous enthusiasm of the audiences and packed houses" proves that there is something more to being an American soldier than the gag and the gams.

Hopes for Others

"I HOPE," he told Producer Blevins Davis, "that you will find ways to bring us many more such productions."

So, thanks to the generosity of Davis and the conviction of the top brass, there may well be some memorable theater to remind our representatives abroad of a culture they were too young to enjoy while at home and to convince the unknowing European that we have some arts in America to rival their own.

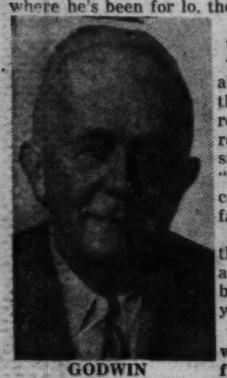
From WMAL to WRC

Earl Godwin Goes Half a Flight Up

By Sonia Stein

THE "SAGE OF THE POTOMAC" is paddling his canoe a bit upstream Monday.

Commentator Earl Godwin, who was a veteran newspaperman in the early Woodrow Wilson era, and who doesn't refer to his age, is moving to WRC from WMAL where he's been for lo, these many years.



GODWIN

Godwin sells a kind of corn that's been very popular. His views of Washington news are always personalized, always in the vernacular and always directed toward the "folks." He reduces news stories to their simplest, makes no attempt at "experting" and gives an occasional report on his 60-acre farm in Fairfax County.

Godwin's age makes him a little short of breath but long on authoritative background. He's been a newsman for almost 45 years—the last 15 on the air.

A native Washingtonian, Godwin inherited printers' ink blood from his father who was city and managing editor of the Evening Star. His first radio assignment—a 10-minute news spot—paid him $10. Subsequent assignments with larger stipend lured him away from newspaper work entirely.

He has built up extensive personal contacts: newsmen who have worked with him say he can get any Government official to talk to him on the phone at any hour. At White House press conferences, he's accorded the place of honor near the President's desk.

Pleased at Acquisition

SO WRC IS quite set up over getting him. William McAndrew, WRC's general manager who shepherded him into the fold, used to work with him in the late thirties when he was a newsman. He's been accused of coining the phrase "sage of the Potomac" for Godwin but he refuses the honor.

WRC has had an eye on Godwin for quite a while and suddenly came up with a good spot for him at 6:15 p. m.

There is a news-minded segment of Washingtonians which want a straight hour of news. After listening to the Esso news show at 6 and Lief Eid at 6:05, they'd flip the dial to another station offering more news and maybe never come back for the later WRC news shows.

Now, presumably they'll stay with WRC.

Godwin will also do a minute and a half news spot on the 11:15 p. m. "News of the World" show for NBC. It'll be transcribed because gentlemen farmers don't stay up that late if they can help it.

Mysteries Replace

DOWNSTAIRS a half a flight at WMAL (which shares studios with WRC) the departure of Godwin leads to the inauguration of a series of mystery stories which were bought up at a handsome price because WMAL discovered in a diary study of television shows that WMAL-TV's "Frontier Theater" of adventure films, and another shorter period of Buck Rogers type serials were holding a large segment of the population transfixed.

Each half-hour show of the "Boston Blackie" series will be a complete mystery story in itself, and yet Blackie will be the central figure in all of them. The shows are not thrown together in haste at the last minute. They are produced at the rate of one-a-week on WOR in New York where they have the highest Hooper rating of any series on the station. Transcriptions are made for country-wide distribution. WOR has such a head start that there is a backlog of two years worth—using them five days a week—for WMAL to broadcast. The show will be heard at 6:15 p. m. weekdays.

Blackie owes much of his popularity to his sense of humor and the lack of blood and horror in the mysteries he tackles. He's played by Richard Kollmar who is heard on many other air shows including a New York breakfast show with his wife, Dorothy Kilgallen.

WMAL-TV will bust out with a real thigh-slapper kind of show Thursday night at 10:15 p. m. It's called "Laughter—C.O.D." and is the invention of Gil Hodges

Road to Musicianship Is Long and Tortuous

By Paul Hume

DURING THE past week a young music student asked me, "What must a person do to become a great artist?"

If we may assume that artists are not born that way but may become so, let us examine the requirements. George Bernard Shaw says, "The truth is that the artist must be at once his own master and everybody's pupil. If he cannot learn from all that he sees and hears, and then teach himself the practical application of what he has learnt, art is not his affair, and he had better remain an amateur."

Shaw continues, in what is advice he gave a young zealot in 1889—advice as sound today as 60 years ago, and more necessary today than then.

He wrote, during his regime as music critic of the London Star, "First he must learn to sing: That is, to touch or sustain any note within his compass with certainty of pitch and beauty of tone, and withal with an unembarrassed management of it, so that it may be lightly or vigorously touched or sustained, just as he wishes."

Importance of Do, Re, Mi

"SECOND," says our great mentor, "He must learn to pronounce with purity the syllables do, re, mi, fa, so that his more or less genteel variations on the original . . . may become utterly repugnant to him." "He must," continues our man who is not easy to satisfy, "also learn foreign vowels, so as to be able to sing and sustain them without ever changing them, English fashion, at the end."

And returning to the first point, Shaw reiterates, "He must listen to himself with his whole soul until his ear has grown exquisitely sensitive to minute shades of intonation and pronunciation—until he cannot go wrong without literally hurting himself."

Now this set of rules can be directly applied to any kind of musical performance. Violinists, pianists, French horn players, even conductors, must be as thorough with themselves, if they would become true artists. That is, they must attain absolute mastery of the technique of their profession before they try to use it for interpretive ends.

Employing Technique

SHAW PROCEEDS to the more important phase, that of artistic employment of the technical control thus attained. He believes, "the fine artist improves until age unmakes more progress in the year than culture can make."

The would-be artist can, according to the Irishman, "Keep good music sounding in his ears." He can go to concerts, at least sometimes; to the best of the oratorio performances; to the opera occasionally; and to the theaters. "Let him make studies," says the sage, "of inferior, good, and first-rate artists in point of intonation and pronunciation."

This advice is sound, and so seemingly obvious, that it is a shame it should be needed today. Yet today artists are fewer than they were in the days when music was still unknown in many parts of the world.

Germany, Austria Being Added

Movies on U. S. Life Going to 54 Nations

THE State Department, which has been running a movie circuit of vast proportions since the end of the war—bringing documentary pictures about America to an estimated 10,000,000 people a month in 52 countries—is now making plans to inaugurate its movie program in Germany and Austria.

These films, the State Department believes, will be one of the most effective means of re-educating the two countries, just as they have brought the story of democracy to people all over the world, many of them in lands which are continually bombarded with Russian propaganda.

The screenings are arranged by American embassies and consulates, and the people who attend them come not to see a Clark Gable or a Lana Turner, but to learn about the people of this country—their problems, institutions, facilities and way of life.

Propaganda Denied

THE Government attaches great importance to the pictures because they reach many people who don't ordinarily attend movies. Screenings are regularly arranged, and may vary from a formal showing at the embassy to an outdoor affair using a portable screen rigged in the market square of some remote mountain village.

There have been instances where these State Department films were the first motion picture show ever witnessed by natives of an area.

Any suggestion that they run a propaganda agency is firmly rejected by the men who operate the International Motion Picture Division, a sub-section of the State Department's Office of International Information.

Confronted with a strong Russian propaganda barrage abroad and outnumbered hopelessly by their Soviet counterparts, they can only hope to impress people with their factual approach and objectivity and to jar loose some popular and deliberately fostered misconceptions about this country.

As Hamilton McFadden, associate chief of the division in New York, puts it: "We're not circulating these films abroad to glamorize the United States. We will show anything that might help give a true understanding of what this country is all about. To do this we always try to show both sides of a question. We let them have the facts and they can then make up their minds".

200 Films Circulate

THE United States Information Service, as it is known abroad, has supplied 139 American diplomatic missions in foreign countries with 16-mm. projectors. Some of them serve in regular little theaters, others are of the portable kind that can easily be carried or transported on a jeep.

Each of these embassies or consulates has one or two men devoted to running the screenings. Reports reaching New York tell of enthusiastic and appreciative audience reaction to the wide variety of pictures shown.

About 200 different movies are in general circulation. They may be industrially-sponsored films of great value or they may be documentaries especially produced for the State Department. Mr. MacFadden reports that many industrial organizations have consented to eliminate advertising from their films to make them acceptable for information program purposes.

The division spends some $500,000 a year on the production of documentaries and gets about 30 reels for its money. These cover all aspects of American life. One, for instance, was called "Journey Into Medicine" and traced the facilities available to any medical student who makes the grade.

Who Said It? Most Bigwigs Can't Answer

By John Crosby

NYHT News Service

"WHO Said That?" one of the happier of recent inspirations in radio, is a program on which distinguished guests, not all as well read as they ought to be, identify quotations from the week's news.

The producer, Fred Friendly, who digs up most of the quotes, says the second most quoted man on the show is President Truman, a rather odd thing because Presidents are rarely quoted directly in newspapers. The most quoted man is George Bernard Shaw, who has something to say about every public question. The least quoted is Harpo Marx. Harpo hasn't been in the news since a Hooper girl called Groucho and asked him what he had on his radio. "A picture of Harpo," said Groucho.

The easiest man to identify is Andrei Vishinsky. No one ever misses a Vishinsky quote because there isn't anyone else in the world who talks that way. Examples of Vishinsky's style: "You are so holy that you will go straight to Paradise right after this session of the Assembly." "You should not try to catch fleas lest a camel slip through your fingers." For some reason, the remarks of Senator Margaret Chase Smith, of Maine, are never missed either.

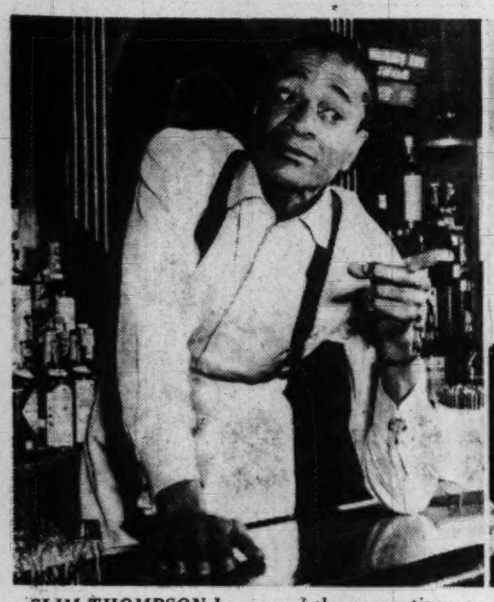
Five Companies This Week

'Live' Theater Rules Capital



SLIM THOMPSON has one of the supporting roles in "Anna Lucasta," the Philip Yordan drama which Isabelle Cooley is playing through Thursday night at the Howard

KAY FRANCIS visits the Olney in Rachel Crothers' comedy, "Let Us Be Gay," opening Tuesday night

SOUND actors, live theater have descended on Washington with a zest. This week five companies, of varying standards, will be playing to Capital audiences.

"Anna Lucasta," the Negro play now in its fifth season, already has begun its first Washington engagement at the Howard Theater, where Isabelle Cooley has the title role in the Philip Yordan creation, with Slim Thompson featured.

The engagement will continue through Thursday night with several members of the New York-Chicago-London company still in the cast.

Tomorrow night two openings are scheduled, one the return of a Pulitzer Prize winner, the second a new comedy by Don Rodden and Joe Coogan of Catholic University.

"The Time of Your Life," William Saroyan's unique comedy, will open a week's stay at the new Meridian Hill Park Theater with Eddie Dowling in the starring role he created on Broadway. Saroyan's comedy received both the Pulitzer award and the New York Drama Critics' citation for 1939. Eddie Garr, of vaudeville and the night clubs, heads Dowling's supporting cast.

"Small Beer in Springtime" is the Catholic University comedy, second in the drama department's summer series of three plays. This will run in the campus theater through Saturday evening.

John Rodney, now of the films, will star in the C. U. play, going back to the locale which knew him as John Flynn before his bow in films. By a coincidence, Rodney, then Flynn, played Eddie Dowling, star of "The Time of Your Life," in the university's musical about the song and dance man, "Eddie the First," several springs ago.

JOHN RODNEY

Tuesday night brings Screen Star Kay Francis to the Olney stage in Rachel Crother's popular comedy, "Let Us Be Gay." Miss Francis, through her long and distinguished career on stage and screen, scarcely needs an introduction. Her leading man will be Joel Ashley and the supporting cast will include Dean Harens, Maida Reade, June Dayton, William Putch, Donald Foster and Porter Van Zandt. "Let Us Be Gay" will run at Olney through Sunday evening, with Saturday and Sunday matinees.

Wednesday night, the popular amateur Cross Roads Theater will be playing its comedy of San Francisco politics, "Strange Bedfellows," as presented by Irma Gordon, Cecil Willis and Lowell Swortzell.

Tonight concludes the Hartmans' week in "Up to Now," a musical revue, at Olney, where there's the usual Sunday matinee, and at Meridian Hill Buster Keaton and Teddy Hart wind up their week in the farce-comedy, "Three Men on a Horse."

Old Coon Hunter's Loose in Maryland

GRANDPA JONES, star of the Connie B. Gay hillbilly shows, will tour the Sidney Lust Maryland theaters this week with a group of his folksong fellows.

The old coon hunter will have with him Ramona, champion girl fiddler and mountain singer; Lennie Aleshire, the "One-Man Comedy Band," and Smitty Smith, the harmonica-guitarist expert.

Tomorrow and Tuesday, Grandpa and his troupe will be appearing at the Beltsville Drive-In. Thursday night they'll be at the Milo Theater, Rockville; Friday at Upper Marlboro, and on Saturday they'll double between the Cheverly Theater and Mount Rainier's Cameo Theater.

Theater Time Table

Dupont—"One Night With You." Nino Martini and Patricia Roc have the leads in this British comedy filmed in Italy. Opens tomorrow.

Bicentenary

200 to Enact Pageant at Culpeper

WOODFORD B. HACKLEY, a native of Culpeper, Va., now a professor at the University of Richmond, is the author of "Under Three Flags," a pageant based on the history of Culpeper County since 1749 which will be acted this week at Culpeper.

The 14-scene production with a cast of 200 will be presented Thursday and Friday nights at 8 o'clock on the high school football field as part of the county's Bicentennial Celebration, now being observed. The pageant's title recalls the fact that Culpeper has been under the British, Confederate and American flags.

Directing and acting as narrator will be Tivis Wicker.

Mrs. Berkeley G. Calfee, chairman of the pageant committee, reports she "farmed out" the various scenes to civic groups for acting and that wherever possible residents have been cast as their ancestors.

Angus McDonald Green, for instance, is a great-great-grandson of John Williams Green of the Virginia Court of Appeals, and will play the judge in a scene depicting him welcoming Lafayette to Greenwood in 1825.

'Ye Beare' Wakes From Long Snooze

EXMORE, Va. (AP).—Ye Beare and Ye Cubb is moving back into the theatrical spotlight here after nearly three centuries of hibernation.

It's taking up as a summer theatre enterprise on Virginia's Eastern Shore as a namesake of the first English spoken dramatic effort in America.

Three Accomac County farmers trod the boards for the first time in the colonies on August 27, 1665. They were Cornelius Watkinson, Philip Howard and William Darby. They gave verses, speeches and passages of a play called "Ye Beare and Ye Cubb."

One colonial critic, Edward Martin, took a look at "Ye Beare and Ye Cubb" and cried out: "Ye Gods!"

He thereupon had the company arrested on charges of indecent conduct. Court records of Accomac County disclose that the three early thespians were eventually acquitted and Martin had to pick up the check for the cost of prosecution. But the court action trimmed the run of the show.

This history of the theater on the wave-washed Eastern Shore lay pretty much buried in the past until young actor-director Paul Slocumb of Detroit stumbled on it this spring. The name of the seventeenth century production was too much to resist: He banded his players together under the name of "Ye Beare and Ye Cubb."

The curtain goes up tomorrow night on the company's first offering, "The Voice of the Turtle."

"The Voice" has at least one thing in common with "Ye Beare and Ye Cubb"—there are only three in the cast.

Vet Mexican Actor Would Exchange His Job in Films

Hollywood (AP).—"Acting? You can have it!" says Jose Torvay, veteran of many Mexican movies. "If I could get another steady job I'd quit."

He doesn't dare, he added, because he has 11 adopted children.

Torvay is playing three different roles in his second Hollywood film, "Borderline." In his first, "Treasure of the Sierra Madre," he stole Humphrey Bogart's boots. Among the reasons he doesn't like acting:

"Once, in Mexico, I played a really mean villain who beat up a young girl. You know, after the premiere of that movie a gang was ready to shoot me."

ANN TODD stars in "One Woman's Story," by Eric Ambler opening Wednesday at the Playhouse. Claude Rains and Trevor Howard are her leading men in this British-made film

Roz Russell's Really Got Up in This One

Hollywood (AP).—Rosalind Russell wears one of the really odd fashion conglomerations for a sequence in Columbia's "My Next Husband."

The camera shows Rosalind arriving, sopping wet, in evening regalia at a lighthouse after being shipwrecked and rescued. The only dry clothing at hand in the lightkeeper's wardrobe are an oxersize pair of dungarees and a black turtleneck sweater.

Afraid to leave her evening jewelry lying around loose, she puts on the diamond necklace and four diamond bracelets over the sweater. She wears her diamond earrings, too.

Little Theaters Snap Up Big Movie Stars

HOLLYWOOD (AP).—The Little Theaters are snaring the big stars.

A few years ago salary cutting was close to heresy. Most important film actors shunned stage appearances unless the fee at least approached their studio stipends. Little Theaters can't pay that kind of money.

Yet it's common now to find Hollywood luminaries heading casts in community theaters and beach-town summer stock companies. They get Equity minimum — $25 to $50 a week, lowest permissible salaries a producer can pay actors in the theater. Rehearsal pay is even lower.

Why? Some stars are hungry for live audiences. Some are sick of the parts they play in movies. But the reasons aren't all artistic or altruistic. Little Theater appearances have become good business.

When Judith Anderson went to Carmel, Calif., to do "Family Portrait" and the Robinson Jeffer's play, "Tower Beyond Tragedy," in California's first summer theater, she earned $160 for a month's work. But her association with Jeffers led to "Medea." He wrote it expressly for her. It became a hit on Broadway and on tour. Miss Anderson's subsequent salary for two seasons: About $3000 a week.

Ross Hunter gets the minimum for working 16 hours a day in "Tongue in Cheek," Hollywood's newest intimate musical revue. Yet he's happy. A season ago in the same theater William Eythe got base pay as star and producer of "Lend An Ear," which became a Broadway success grossing close to $38,000 a week. Eythe gets a healthy share.

Gregory Peck admits he's stagestruck. Last year he spent an entire season as impresario of a stock company at La Jolla, Calif. He is ready to do it again this year, joined by Jennifer Jones, Rory Calhoun, Jeff Donnell and many others.

Charles Laughton always wanted to play "Galileo." He did, for Equity minimum at a Hollywood theater last year. The show subsequently flopped in New York, but Laughton, who doesn't exactly need money, still believes in doing what he wants to do. He's looking for another play.

'Gate Concerts in Final Week

LEE FAIRFAX

HAZEL ARTH

This is the final week of Watergate concerts by the National Symphony Orchestra summer band under Howard Mitchell.

Programs equal the best of the past three weeks: Mozart's G Minor Symphony tonight plus the Brahms Alto Rhapsody and Soloists Hazel Arth and Lee Fairfax. Fairfax is the concert name of Fague Springmann, Alexandria baritone who won himself a smash debut this spring in Carnegie Hall.

Wednesday night is all-Gershwin with Jane Pickens to sing and Abba Bogin in the famous Rhapsody. Friday night turns to grand opera with both Eleanor Steber and Leonard Warren in favorite scenes and duets. The orchestra will play two of the most famous overtures in opera: Beethoven's third Leonore, and the Meistersinger Prelude.

And the very next week, on August 3, the San Carlo Opera Company will come to the barge with the first two weeks of opera. Metropolitan Tenor Richard Tucker will sing with the company, as will Winifred Heidt. Other good singers listed include Thomas Hayward and Vasso Argyris, tenors, and Hizi Koyke, Mina Cravi and Eva Likova, sopranos.

Schedule of operas is set for: August 3, Carmen; 4, Mme. Butterfly; 5, Aida; 6, Traviata; 7, Boheme; 9, Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci; 10, Faust; 11, Rigoletto; 12, Carmen; 13, Mme. Butterfly.

Thus there will be two chances to attend Carmen and Mme. Butterfly, but only one to hear each of the other operas. Pasquale de Angelis and Carlo Moresco will divide the conducting duties.

Pasquale Tallarico's good program for tonight's National Gallery concert is the last music to be heard there until September 11.

True Musical Artists Travel Arduous Path

HUME, From Page 1

Today, it is easier for musicians to make a living than at any time in the past. This does not mean that it is easier to become an artist. Indeed, the opposite seems to be true—that it is harder to become a true artist today than in the past.

Young Pianist's Record

ON THE WORD of William Schatzkamer, one of the rising young pianists of our generation, a man still in his twenties, he played 51 concerts during the season just ended. At the end of his tour, a tour impossible until the last two decades, he had a net of $5000. Not bad for a pianist, who under the best circumstances could not have played 51 paying engagements per season until he was over 40, in the 1920's.

But does this mean that every performer today is an artist? By no means. Some are on the way—and some are traveling away from artistry just as fast as numerous engagements and a relatively easy living make possible.

For it takes maturity and hard work, ceaseless hard work, to attain the goal of an artist. Last year when she was visiting Washington, Jarmila Novotna, star of opera and concert, told me of a collection of letters she had received over the years from the late Jan Masaryk.

Masaryk, a pianist and artist of serious attainments, used to write Novotna, one time telling her of a certain art gallery in Rome where she would learn something of value to her career, on another occasion suggesting that she read a relatively unknown but valuable novel or bit of philosophical writing for insight into the realm of esthetics.

Broad Knowledge Needed

FOR THE TRUE artist is the person who commands not only the technical side of his art, but who understands the relation between his art and the times which produced it, the creative forces behind it, and the esthetic and philosophic forces operating upon it through the years.

Few great artists became great at an early age—nor is there any need for haste in achieving the goal. It is far more important that the way toward it be straight and wisely chosen.

How many artists can we name among today's practicing musicians? (Why should we get into a controversy over such a subject?) But if you want to suggest there are souls you think belong in this category, we would be glad to have your opinions. Remember—there aren't many.

Airwave Giveways Rise

By C. E. Butterfield

NEW YORK (AP).—By this time, giveaways on the radio have extended themselves well into the category of a million dollar business. That is, if the handing out of prizes can be called a business.

Available figures tend to support the business theory, with the sum of $3,363,260 passed out from the principal well-stocked jackpots alone.

On top of this can be put a healthy hunk of consolation awards. These run into the hundreds of thousands. All the figures, of course, are based on broadcasters' estimates of the retail value of the goods and services making up the awards.

While the craze for bigger and bigger jackpots dates back as far as 1945, the huge awards really didn't get going until March 21, 1948, when ABC trotted out Stop the Music to introduce its particular method of pyramiding prizes.

"Queen for a Day" Leads

BUT the "biggest of all" claimant might well be the MBS Queen for a Day which gives its prizes to daily and specially selected "queens." In about 1100 broadcasts since April 1945 the program rates its total giveaways at $2,126,000. They have been divided among more than a thousand persons.

Winner Take All of CBS, next oldest in the business, hasn't been so profuse in its quiz-type awards, nevertheless it has handed out $300,000 worth in 800 broadcasts. About 5000 participants got a share. The program started June 3, 1946.

Altogether the jackpots of the three principals—Stop the Music, Sing it Again on CBS since May 1948, and Hit the Jackpot, which started on CBS the same month—have totaled $937,260. What's more, that all went to only 42 persons.

About $23,000 Apiece

THE "veteran" of the trio, Stop the Music, puts its jackpot total at $389,610 won by 17 persons. To this can be added another $227,400 in consolation prizes.

Sing it Again jackpots worth $288,200 have been distributed to 12 persons. No figures on consolations have been compiled.

Hit the Jackpot divided its gifts between $259,450 to 13 big winners and $160,284 for smaller prizes to a larger number of individuals.

Capitol Plans Classic Discs In 3 Speeds

BIG NEWS in the field today is about the various speeds of records.

Capitol Records has just announced that, beginning in September, it will produce all classical records in all three speeds now available to the public. This means that their records, including the great European catalog of what were formerly Telefunken records, can be bought to play at 78, 45, or 33 1/3 revolutions per minute.

Capitol is the first company to make this concession to the current record situation. They have been making records at 78 and 45 r.p.m. It is significant that they say, "we have received a great many requests from record dealers and the public, to produce classics on long playing 33 1/3 records."

They also say, and don't miss this, "Capitol does not plan to issue its popular records on 33 1/3, feeling that public reaction has definitely proved these two speeds (78 and 45 r.p.m.) most satisfactory for popular works."

The last point has been our contention from the time Victor announced their new system of 45 r.p.m.; i. e., that popular records at 45 were all very well but that the classical record buying public would prefer the long-playing disc. Victor has maintained the classical record-buying is of sufficient importance, according to its vice president, James Murray, to warrant the manufacture of the long-playing records.

REVIEWS:

Victor has by now assembled an imposing list of sets available on 45 r.p.m. We list some of the outstanding items here:

Beethoven: Sonatas in D and A, Opus 12—Jascha Heifetz and Emanuel Bay. WDM 1254.

Chopin: Concerto No. 2 in F Minor—Artur Rubinstein and the NBC Symphony under Steinberg. WDM 1012.

DeFalla: El Amor Brujo—Nan Merriman with Hollywood Bowl Orchestra under Stokowski. WDM 1089.

Khatchaturian: Gayne Suite. Chicago Symphony under Rodzinski. WDM 1212.

Outstanding singles at 45 r.p.m. include:

Liszt: Sonetto del Petrarca—William Kapell, pianist. 49-0389;

Bach-Liszt: Prelude and Fugue in A Minor—Byron Janis, pianist. 49-0456;

Rossini: Barber of Seville: Largo al factotum; also: Leoncavallo: Zaza: Zaza, piccola Zingara—Robert Merrill, baritone. 49-0459.

Mozart: Symphony No. 35 in D Major—"Haffner"—Pittsburgh Symphony under Reiner. Columbia 836. $4.00.

Some time ago Reiner gave us his version of the G Minor symphony. Here is a much lighter, brighter work, and his touch is equally refined. It is a great experience to hear Mozart played with such sound musicianship combined with grace.

A conductor who can do with Wagner and Strauss what Reiner does, and then display the proper sensitivity for Mozart is indeed a rare jewel. That Reiner is able to do these things is no longer a surprise, but it continues to reassure us as we contemplate the disappearance from our midst of the great men of conducting in this grand manner. This is a fine recording in every way. P. H.

Tucker Hits Those Soft Drinks Hard

By W. G. Rogers

NEW YORK (AP).—"The first thing I do after every evening concert," says Richard Tucker, Metropolitan Opera tenor, "is to have a chocolate ice cream soda."

But this hard drinker of soft drinks missed out on six sodas summer before last when he sang in the Verona Arena before open-air crowds of 25,000 enthusiastic music lovers. There were no ice cream sodas in Italy or in other European countries in which, on his first transatlantic trip, he spent eight weeks.

He made up for it when he got back. "The first two things I did at LaGuardia Airport," he said, "were to kiss the soil of the United States, and run inside the terminal building for a double chocolate ice cream soda."

80,000 in Chicago

THOUGH the Verona audiences were big, he has sung before bigger ones. The largest ever was 80,000 in Chicago's Grant Park. And when he was Rhadames in Toscanini's production of "Aida" with the NBC Symphony, his listeners mounted into the millions.

But 80,000 or 80, size of audience makes no difference to this singer. That is because he was trained in a church choir. Of Romanian descent, he was brought up in Brooklyn and for 16 years sang in a synagogue, from which the "Met's" General Manager Edward Johnson practically had to drag him over to the New World's premier opera house for his debut in 1945.

The choir is the place to begin, says Tucker . . . Helen Traubel and Johnson himself are among Americans who launched their careers in church services. The experience trains the singer, Tucker explains, and accustoms him to an audience.

He now travels 15,000 miles a year on concert tours. When he isn't away singing, or home learning new roles, he's at his New York office tending to his 12-year-old textile business. He knows some "Met" associates who wouldn't mind being business associates, too. "The vocal cords don't last forever," says this farsighted singer.

Wife and Three

BESIDES, he has a wife and three sons to support. The oldest boy, Barry, 11, plays the piano; the second, David, 7, may be an actor, and the third, Henry, 3, may be a singer, though right now he much prefers Gene Autry's yodels to his father in any opera. When Barry, who was then 8, first spotted his father on the "Met" stage, he called out loudly: "That's Daddy!" The boys definitely do not like the way he makes love to Mimi in "La Boheme;" the poor girl can't die soon enough to suit them.

Tucker has filled 10 leading roles at the "Met," in "La Gioconda," "La Traviata," "Rigoletto," "Aida," "Lucia" among others, and has a repertory of five or six more.

No Marie and Wally, Says Percy Kilbride

Hollywood (AP).—Percy Kilbride laughs when he hears somebody say that he and Marjorie Main, as Ma and Pa Kettle on the screen, are following the Wallace Beery-Marie Dressler tradition.

"Marj and I are earthy when we get together in a picture, but I don't see any resemblance between the types of roles we play and those played by Wallace and Marie," he said on the set of "Free for All."

Pops Concert On Victor L. P. Records

MY FIRST private concert made up of RCA Victor's new 45 r.p.m. small records, on an RCA Victor player, amounted to approximately a 10-part program. It included ballet music by Offenbach, Delibes and Tchaikovsky, Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite" and Ravel's "Bolero," Merrill in British folk songs, the first piano quartet and Mozart's concerto for bassoon and orchestra and serenade for 13 wind instruments.

It's a "pops" program. The emphasis is on horns, woodwinds and boom-boom-boom. These numbers, by and large, call for clear, precise and rhythmically accurate performances rather than for emotional utterance; they cry, sometimes shrilly, for the listener's attention; and so if once in a while they sound shrill, that is probably because it's that kind of music.

The small disks excel in picking up detail, and supply exactly what this kind of program demands. What else they do can be told better after repeated hearings, and hearings of dissimilar works. W. G. ROGERS (AP).

Art Competition Winners Named

Edouard Goerg's expressionist painting of the Nativity was awarded first prize of $2000 in Paris in an American-sponsored competition art award in which more than 5000 French artists and American GIs competed.

He will now compete against American artists in New York late this year for an additional $3500 international award offered by the Hallmark Greeting Card Co., Kansas City, Mo. Guillemette Morand, an obscure Parisian girl, won second prize of $1500 and Christian Caillard, French realist painter, third and $1000.

U. S. Ambassador David K. E. Bruce presented the prizes. Honorable mention awards of $750 each went to seven other artists. The 10 prize winners plus 25 additional paintings on exhibit will be shipped to New York and exhibited there and in other leading American art museums next year.

Print Collections Attest

'Poor' Artists Aid Government

"Weatherbeaten," an etching and aquatint by Charles W. Dahlgreen, Chicago artist who donated his etching plates to the Smithsonian

By Jane Watson Crane

AT THE present time the Government has three print collections, all of which are growing. Recent additions are currently being shown at the National Gallery, the Library of Congress, and the Division of Graphic Arts of the Smithsonian. From time to time there is talk of forming a combine, but so far as we know no move has been made in that direction. In the meantime, prints are being added by gift or purchase, each institution pursuing its own policy.

Since artists are seldom rich, and the legend about their impecuniousness exceeds even the reality, it is curious to find that both the Library of Congress and the Smithsonian owe additions to their collections to the generosity of artists.

The Library of Congress show, which continues until August, is financed in part at least through the bequest of the late Joseph Pennell, of whose own work the Library owns a sizable collection. The Pennell Fund exhibition is a competitive, jury chosen annual, open to graphic artists throughout the country. From it a substantial number of purchases are made each year.

Dahlgreen Donation

BEHIND the current display at the Smithsonian is an unusual donation, given during the artist's lifetime. Charles Dahlgreen is a Chicago printmaker, now in his 80s. Three years ago he gave the Smithsonsian the plates of his prints, with the understanding that a special edition be published and distributed by the Government, the money accruing from sales to be used as a purchase fund.

During the first two years the Smithsonian, with the help of announcements in publications, sold Dahlgreen prints in the special edition to the amount of about $2000. Without publicity during the past year, sales have fallen off, but in all the Division of Graphic Arts has bought 27 prints from funds thus made available. Among them are choices essential to any representative collection, including examples of Daumier, Goya, Zorn and Lautrec.

The purpose of the Smithsonian in regard to prints is the most clearly defined of the three institutions and consistent with the intent of the founder. The focus is not on esthetics, but on processes. There are exhibits illustrating the methods used for each graphic medium, and the prints are used primarily as examples. Latest addition is a display showing the silk screen process, developed as a fine art through the Federal Arts Project less than a decade ago.

Youngest of the Government print collections is that of the National Gallery, the nucleus of which is the gift of Lessing Rosenwald. On display now at the gallery is the most recent group donation, prints by masters of the past from the bequest of the late R. Horace Gallatin.

D. C. Display Promising

CONTEMPORARY print-makers of Washington are represented in a show at the Whyte Gallery. Since work in the graphic arts is not a particularly strong point in this community, the caliber and promise of the group comes as a surprise. Notable are entries by Rudi Lesser, a European emigre who has been teaching at Howard University; Jacob Kainen, curator of prints at the Smithsonian; Jack Perlmutter, Prentiss Taylor, and Pietro Lazzari.

The Whyte Gallery is making a special effort to give opportunity to newcomers. As in previous shows, there are several entries by students which more than justify this policy.

Art Notes

South Africa Art Exhibit Due in D. C.

OPENING next Sunday at the National Gallery is an exhibition of contemporary paintings, drawings, and sculpture by South Africans. Sponsored by the government of South Africa and chosen by the state education department in collaboration with the arts association, it consists of more than a hundred items, all from private collections. Twelve of the painters and three of the sculptors are women. There is work by only one native South African, a Bantu, self-taught, who is now getting some training in Paris. The show will continue through Labor Day.

Recently in Washington from Miami was Louis Francis, a painter and inventor, with samples of a canvas made of graphite, copper wire and glass fiber, which he believes may be the answer to the preservation of oil paintings. The biggest step toward this end was made when the Bureau of Standards established a commercial standard for oil paints in 1942. This was prepared in the Paint Testing and Research Laboratory in Boston. It covers minimum requirements as to color and durability, and also outlines methods of testing.

In October the National Gallery of Art will publish a book on sculpture in its collections, with text by Charles Seymour, and large-scale reproductions, including details.

Mitchell Jamieson, one of the leading artists in this community, will go West this fall to teach at the Cornish School in Seattle.

Selden Rodman, author of works on Horace Pippin and other artists, is at present gathering material for a book on Ben Shahn, mural and easel painter, best known in Washington for his murals in the Social Security Building.

The Alexandria Library, at 717 Queen st., is exhibiting until August 19 prints and drawings by John C. Rogers. Hours are from 9 to 9 Mondays through Fridays, Saturdays, 9 to 1.

Recent engravings by Thomas Nason are being shown through July at Alfred Fowler's, 1714 Connecticut ave. Paintings by Rowland Lyon are on exhibit in the Dupont Theater gallery.

"Boston Blackie" discusses a clue or two with his pretty assistant. Richard Kollmar and Leslie Woods play the roles of the sleuth and his Girl Friday on the half-hour mystery series which will be heard five days a week on WMAL beginning tomorrow night at 6:15

'Boston Blackie' Series Replaces Commentator

who'll emcee it. However, even he won't deny that it's kissing kin to "Truth or Consequences."

This show will give you an opportunity to see—or be—local people engaged in such stunts as the following:

Gentlemen identifying their wives by their legs only.

An amateur vying with a professional goat milker who is handicapped by gloves.

A man donning woman's clothing in a race with a woman donning men's clothing.

That's the kind of show it is.

It's all well and good to smirk about such weary gags as these, but they are always good for a laugh even the umpteenth time around.

Participants, who may get into this mess (and thereby qualify for prizes) by writing to the station and showing suitable zeal and ease at an audition, will be asked questions on some subject in which they profess to be expert. When they fail the question—as they probably will—they get a lesson in the subject, which is the stunt.

Subs for Tannen

FORTUNATELY, daily contact with Ernie Tannen has prepared his listeners for anything. WGAY's morning man lined up a well-rounded assortment of guest disc jockeys to substitute for him on the 7:30 a. m. show while he's on vacation. Columnist Wick Byron, Publicity Director Marty Shwartz of Olney Theater and Savas Sapounakis, authority on Greek music, have already been on.

Tomorrow brings Chuck Dulane, voted handsomest sports announcer in radio; Tuesday the Rev. John F. McClelland, president of the Silver Spring Ministers Association; Wednesday, Dr. George Sterling August, the dentist with real pull; Thursday, Dr. Jesse W. Sprowls, professor of abnormal psychology at Maryland U.; and Friday, Mrs. Louise Walker, superintendent of audio-visual education in Montgomery County.

The following week Joe Brechner, general manager of WGAY, and Charlie Kopeland, radio columnist and advertising man, will hold the fort. Tannen's due back the following Wednesday—to see if one of his substitutes has stolen his listeners.

Contest Office Waits Its 10-Millionth Card

SOME time this summer, the Hollywood postoffice will handle an unusual penny postcard. There won't be any fanfare about this bit of cardboard, however, until it reaches the Queen for a Day office of Hollywood blvd., just a medium jump from Vine st. But when the card gets there, a crisis is going to happen unless the office adding machine can tot up to 10 million.

The point of this is that "Queen for a Day" is about to get its 10 millionth reply on a series of nominations for "Queens at Home." At this writing, the "Queen" auditor has been in a hidden cave for five months and has reached a total of 9,484,938 postcard nominees for "Queen" contests.

This has nothing to do with fan mail or requests for tickets to the Mutual-Don Lee show which Jack Bailey presides over five mornings per week. Those are separate departments.

The idea that goes along with the astronomical figures is simple: People write in nominating others for the "Queen at Home" honors. Lucky nominees, chosen by the fishbowl method, get all sorts of things from the sponsors, Philip Morris and Alka Seltzer.

"No box tops, reasonable facsimiles or anything to send along, either," it's explained. "Just plain old penny postcards."

Latest of the stunts is a Mother-In-Law Queen, to be named July 29. A card is drawn from a box each day, and the daily winner is put into the fishbowl to participate in the final drawing. Winner goes to Hollywood for a 10-day holiday.

Radio's Elite Give Bedside Broadcasts

By Rader Winget

NEW YORK (AP).—Radio and television are busting out at the seams when it comes to finding space to do their work. More and more they are turning to handy Broadway theaters to find a place for their programs.

There are 657 movie and legitimate theaters in New York City, but only about 45 of them have the double advantage of being in the convenient Times Square area and having proper facilities for stage presentations.

Already radio-TV have 12 of them, plus studio space in such buildings as railroad terminals, riding academies and department stores. There are various reports that four or five more theaters soon will ring down their curtains on the thespians and give way to radiorators and telentertainers.

That doesn't mean Broadway's legitimate theater industry is going out of business. But it does mean there is an increasing competition between the two arts for available space.

Use Homes for Studios

ONE PARTIAL solution might be to let broadcasters work from their own homes, as a lot of stars are doing now. Arthur Godfrey is one. He broadcasts frequently from his home in Virginia. Of course that doesn't solve the crowded studio problem. Everybody on the show but Godfrey is in the New York studio.

Kate Smith also broadcasts from her home. In the winter it's in Manhattan, in summer at Lake Placid. She explains: "I work better that way."

Home broadcasting was a necessity with Bob Smith (no relation). He used to broadcast at 6 a. m., had to get out of bed at 4 a. m. He also had some night work. It was too much. So they built a studio in his New Rochelle, N. Y., home. He now has about a two-hour program starting at 6:30 a. m. Just rolls out of bed and goes to work.

There are some occupational hazards in home broadcasting. One recent morning lightning struck Smith's home in the midst of a broadcast and knocked out all the lights. Fortunately it didn't break the radio lines or hurt Smith. That couldn't happen in Manhattan where the big buildings take the bolts and ground them harmlessly.

Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg broadcast their program from their Manhassett, N. Y., home. It, too, is an early morning stint. They don't have a studio, just a line run into the house. But they have to have an engineer.

Recorded on Tape

SUMMERTIME is the high point for home broadcasting. Many stars consider it a form of vacation just to be able to stay at home and work, and the studio is willing to oblige them. The most widespread practice is to send an engineer with a recording outfit to their home and record their entire program, or portions of it, on tape. Then it is taken to the studio for broadcast later either in its entirety or with such things as background music dubbed in.

Using a recorder eliminates almost all of the possibilities for a slip-up, and it makes for a better program because there is no short line from the home to the studio to cut down on quality.

Murrow Finds Right of Dissent In Serious Danger

"The spoken word on the radio should be used to provide the listeners with information and considerations upon which opinion can be based; it should not be used to provide ready-made opinion, or to advocate policy or agitate for action," reporter Edward R. Murrow stated in accepting a George Foster Peabody Award.

Murrow, who is heard five evenings a week (CBS-WTOP, 7:45 p. m. Monday through Friday), was singled out for "Outstanding Reporting and Interpretation of the News." This is his second Peabody Award. The first was in 1944.

Murrow stated further: "We are all tempted by the pearl of popularity; the price of that pearl is too high, if it involves the suppression or the exaggeration of news and opinion. I deem it undeniable that the right of dissent is in danger in this country. Many of us are disposed to confuse dissent with subversion. It should be no part of a broadcaster's purpose to defend the dissenters, but he must be ever-vigilant to see that their dissent is recorded—reported—in order that it may be dealt with, measured and weighed in the market of ideas."

Hazel Markel, director of program service at WTOP, and Mrs. Morris Cafritz broadcast their support of the teenage safe-driving campaign being sponsored by the Authorized Automobile Dealers of Bethesda-Chevy Chase. The campaign urges teenage drivers to sign agreements to follow safe driving rules

Berle-Sullivan Vogue Unabated

THE Milton Berle-Ed Sullivan vogue of television vaudeville, introduced a year or so ago, still is on the upswing. Almost every other week a new show of similar type either introduces itself to the camera or makes known intention to do so.

The latest announcement concerns a sponsor deal for CBS-TV in which the title of the variety revue is to be "Inside USA," using a technique patterned after the Broadway musical of the same name. It will open a weekly half-hour September 29, using a regular cast and guests.

To balance it, another reel, titled "Rural Nurse," showed the struggle to bring adequate health standards to small communities.

A documentary on the U. C. L. A. campus won wide acclaim abroad and served to point out quietly the happy and warm relationship between students and teachers as well as the fact that Negro and white students here mingle freely and without prejudice. But no mention of this fact was made in the accompanying commentary.

Pierce Iron Curtain

WHILE the Voice of America broadcasts and the State Department's "Amerika" Magazine have been able to penetrate the iron curtain, countries under Soviet domination are generally reluctant to permit American information films to cross their borders.

However, there have been occasional showings in Czechoslovakia and Poland. In Czechoslovakia, the Russians run 54 propaganda centers and maintain a staff of 800.

In addition to its documentary program the State Department puts out a monthly film "news magazine." It usually includes three subjects of the human interest type and often has a humorous slant. A special reel was made up and circulated at the time of the elections and Mr. MacFadden says there was—and still is—considerable interest in one film on the presidential Inauguration.

Wherever possible, films are loaned out to schools and union groups where they are likely to do the most good. In some areas the equipment is loaded on to a jeep fitted with a special generator and the unit bounces off into the interior.

In China, natives once asked for films but it developed that there was no road leading to their remote region where a jeep could travel. The Chinese returned six months later, reported that a road had been built and soon after the American car with its film turned up at the village.

Who Said It? Big Names Don't Know All Answers

out of his own mouth is Harold Stassen. Practically nobody gets him right. Mae West is a tough one, too, even though all the quotes have been typical Mae West remarks. It is customary on the program to slip in at least one quote made by one of the guests on the show. The guests rarely remember their own quotes.

An exception to this was Harold Ickes, who remembered saying: "I'll die for the President but I'll be darned if I'll get seasick for him." Ickes, incidentally, pointed out that he didn't say "darned." He said "damned," the old curmudgeon having quite a reputation for profanity which he doesn't want sullied.

Coy at First

Friendly and his wife, who do the digging, read 8 or 10 newspapers. The most nervous guests are the best ones because they do a lot of homework. Mary Margaret McBride has a girl collect all quotes of the week and she studies them carefully before appearing on the show. She's a whiz, too.

Other knowledgeable guests have been John Lardner, a man who has never forgotten anything; James Thurber and George Allen. The worst guests to date have been 'oan Blondell, who sat there saying "I don't know," and Elaine Carrington who answered half a question. Colonel Stoopnagle wasn't much help, either, but he succeeded, to his enormous astonishment, in answering the "all-time" quote.

The quote was: "If A is a success in life, the formula is: A equals X plus Y plus Z; X being work, and Y being play, and Z being keeping your mouth shut."

Said the good colonel: "There's only one person who talks like that and that's Einstein." It was Einstein who said it all right. Stoopnagle could hardly believe his ears.

A LOT of celebrities are reluctant to appear on the program at first, fearing they'll make fools of themselves, but once they've appeared they can't wait to get back. Senator Smith was extremely timid about appearing. She has participated or will participate five times at $150 a throw, which has paid for an entire kitchen in her Skowhegan home. Mrs. Smith also has the distinction of making the funniest remark ever uttered on the program.

Bob Trout said to her: "I know you don't want to be President, Mrs. Smith, but suppose you woke up and found yourself in the White House? What would you do?"

"Well," said Mrs. Smith, "I'd go straight to Mrs. Truman and apologize, and then I'd go home."

The most painful silence that ever took place on the show was when James A. Farley turned to Robert Ruark, the columnist, and asked him to name the members of the 1933 Cabinet. Ruark just sat there helplessly for about 20 seconds. Then he said:

"Mr. Farley, I played baseball on a Washington high school baseball team in 1931. Can you name the first team?

Finally Farley had to name the members of the Cabinet. He got all the names right except one. The one he couldn't remember: Postmaster James A. Farley.

Youth Helps Orient DP Students

By Fred M. Hechinger

CASTLE HOHENASCHAU, Bavaria.—All the heroes of this story are less than 30 years old. They are engaged in a task of gallantry which suggests that high ideals are still alive.

Twenty-seven-year-old Jan van Hoogstraten is in full command of World Student Relief in Trizonia. Assisted by a 20-year-old DP student, he tries to find scholarships and new homes for young displaced persons. This young man from Holland interrupted his own law studies at Lesden University in order to become something like an international "dean of admissions" for some 8000 potential students among the displaced in the three western zones of Germany.

Jan's latest venture is located amid the Bavarian mountains in this somewhat decrepit, but very impressively gilded and marbled castle. World Student Relief here is running a new orientation course for those who have already been given a scholarship to the United States and are preparing to leave. Although the present "enrollment" of 16 young men and women includes Poles, Yugoslavs, Ukrainians, Czechs, Hungarians and Baltic students, within a few days the atmosphere of this ghostly place has taken on something of the American campus.

The heroine of the castle is Janet L. Cooley, 23-year-old Smith College graduate. On a European tour in 1947, just before setting out on a postgraduate course at Oxford, she had talked to officers of WSR. On May 15 of this year she received a telegram at the British university: "Need you urgently."

One Assistant

JANET was given three days to pack her belongings, then went to Germany. Now she is in full charge of the orientation program at this castle. She is president, dean, instructor, house mother and director of maintenance. Her only assistant is Louise Mary Joppe, a British subject of East African and German parentage, who acts as English language instructor.

The third youthful heroine is Dorothy Bruchholz, 23, a graduate of Bryn Mawr, who went to Europe as a WSR representative last summer. She realized that a great deal of work must be done and stayed on as education officer for the International Refugee Organization in Austria. Modern European history had been her major at college, and she is helping to make future history.

Courses start at 9 a. m. and continue until about 10 p. m. Aside from various stages of English language instruction and up-to-date linguaphone lessons, there are classes in American history, conversation, baseball, current events and American culture. In the evening visiting lecturers come from the information and education branch in Munich. Twice a week there are documetary movies and slides on American life. On the lighter side the students learn American sorgs, square dancing, and the technique of roundtable discussions.

Pledged to English

EVERY student signs a pledge that English will be the only language used during the four weeks at Castle Hohenaschau. Wrote one: "I, Helena Rajevski, student of University of Inssbruck, do hereby promise to speak to everybody, who understands English, only in English."

Helena is on her way to the University of Miami where she will continue her study of music.

Orest Poppel of Lemberg, Poland, is a student of law who is about to be "adopted" by the University of Illinois. Orest's father is a teacher but both parents were sent into slave labor by the Germans.

Others of the first batch of students at this unique "preparatory" school are going to Wellesley College, Mass.; Franklin and Marshall at Lancaster, Pa., and Ohio State. Maria Voross of Hungary proudly showed me a letter from her future roommate at Radcliff who had promised to act as her Big Sister. Ingrid and Karen Gutberg, two blonde and beautiful sisters from Latvia, who have meanwhile received their diplomas in organ and piano at the famous "Mozarteum" in Salzburg have received so many friendly letters from their sponsors and fellow-students-to-be at Ohio that they are talking about the campus pretty much like freshmen candidates all over the United States.

By this time American colleges have responded with offers of 170 scholarships for DP students.

Other Scholarships

CANADA, Britain, Australia, Holland and Belgium together have offered another 144 scholarships. While France has not made any definite provision, a number of DP students have "infiltrated" semilegally there, were offered study opportunities, and have then been "legalized" by the French immigrant authorities without much difficulty.

While these young people are putting in untold, gallant effort to help their less fortunate European fellow students, the operation of Castle Hohenaschau is financially anything but assured even at the present shoestring level. With current funds the school can only hope to continue for three months or a total of three successive courses. About $15,000 to $20,000, including staff salaries, would be needed to carry on for a year, admitting 30 students every month.

U. S. Stamp Agency Sets $4,136,122 Record in '49

By William M. Stuart

THE Post Office Department announces that receipts from sales of postage stamps at the Philatelic Agency for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1949, total $4,136,122.01. This is the largest figure since the agency was established in 1922, and was probably due to the fact that so many commemorative issues were authorized by Congress. For the preceding fiscal year receipts were $2,490,705.15. Now that a new order is in effect at the Post Office Department, it is doubtful whether the 1949 record will be surpassed, or equaled, in the future.

STUART

This record of sales is a very decided answer to criticism from members of Congress, as to why the agency still exists. It was established mainly for stamp collectors and has been most successful and helpful. A large percentage of stamps purchased at the agency find their way into collections and are rarely used for postage. Many nations have established philatelic agencies, but that operated by the United States is the most successful of any.

THE Post Office Department has announced that a Government-owned and operated highway post office service will be inaugurated between Williamport and Altoona, Pa., Monday. Special first trip cachets and cancellations will be provided for both offices.

Those interested in special slogan cancellations may obtain the following by sending self-addressed envelopes to the postmaster, Warren, Ohio, with the request that the special cancellation be applied: "150 years of progress celebration—August 27, 1799-September 5, 1949."

On July 31 air mail service will be inaugurated on route AM-98, between Columbus, Macon and Augusta, Ga., and Orangeburg and Charleston, S. C. Special cachets will be provided for Columbus, Macon and Augusta and Charleston. Service at Orangeburg will not be set up at this time. No provision has been made for point-to-point covers.

Beginning August 1 reduced international air mail rates will go into effect to 20 Western Hemisphere countries as follows: Argentina, Bahamas, Bolivia, British Guiana, Costa Rica, Chile, Cuba, Dominician Republic, Ecuador, French Guiana, Guatemala, Haiti, Republic of Honduras, Netherlands West Indies, Nicaragua, Salvador, Surinam, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The Capital Precancel Club will meet Monday evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Dr. C. R. Uhler, 3534 Queseda st. nw.

Joseph A. Herbert, jr., chairman of the National Philatelic Exhibitions of Washington, will be the speaker at the Friendship Stamp Club, Wednesday evening, August 3, at the Eldbrooke Methodist Church, Wisconsin ave. and River rd. nw.

Maryland U. Has an Outpost in Paris

By Tom Hardie

PARIS.—Ten or 12 young men and women were bending over tables in a small, shaded garden, calmly writing away in paper books.

A girl in blue jeans and white shirt wove her way through the group, idly whistling a popular French tune.

Off to one side, a man and woman who looked as if they had just stepped off an American university campus were amiably talking with guests.

This was examination time at the University of Maryland's Foreign Study Center in Paris, with headquarters in a small wooden building in a garden just off Boulevard Montparnasse. The students were winding up a year's study at the Universite de Paris (Sorbonne)—if successful they will receive a master of foreign study degree from their home institution at College Park, Md.

The class of 35 students, many of whom have never seen the Maryland campus or realized that their university has a football team, are taking part in a new and interesting experiment in American higher education. So far, signs are favorable.

Four Centers in All

THE University of Maryland is offering a graduate degree for academic work done entirely abroad. There are now three foreign centers, Paris, Basel and Zurich, which were opened in 1947. A fourth will open in Munich this fall.

Although three other American institutions, Columbia, Smith and Sweet Briar, give credit for work abroad, it is only for the junior year. These students must return to the States for a final undergraduate year in order to receive a degree.

Dr. William R. Quynn, member of Maryland's department of foreign languages, is codirector of the Paris center along with his wife, Mrs. Dorothy Mackay Quynn. He points out that students here can take advantage of the triple-barreled facilities of the Sorbonne (60,000 students), the City of Paris itself, and European travel.

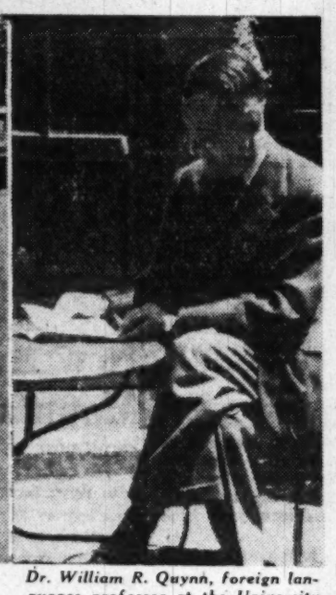
There is a wide diversity of extra-curricular interest, he says, among the 35 "Maryland Plan" students. One has been living with a Russian family in order to learn their tongue. Another has been acting in an amateur experimental theater, while a third has written a book in addition to his required thesis.

Not many years ago the sidewalk cafes of Paris were swarming with disillusioned Americans who liked to call themselves "The Lost Generation." They were the post-World War I Americans who either clipped coupons while sitting in the Paris sun, or chased ever-changing European money markets in search of a square meal.

Not Expatriates

THERE is an entirely different outlook, however, among this group of Americans. They also love Paris, wear beards in an attempt to appear "Bohemian," and often think of America as a strange paradox of democracy and racial segregation. But they do not consider themselves "expatriates"—as did those of the twenties.

Helen Stephens, 28, of 709 Ingraham st. nw., taking final exams at the University of Maryland's Foreign Study Center in Paris. The figure in the background appears to have come out second best in his tussel



Dr. William R. Quynn, foreign languages professor at the University of Maryland, is codirector, with Mrs. Quynn of the university's foreign study center in Paris

Most of the American students, the Maryland group included, are here for a definite purpose. They want to learn and absorb as much as possible, and then return home—in spite of a growing fear of a possible recession in the States.

David Bowen, 21, of 628 25th st. S., Arlington, and a GI graduate of George Washington University, is studying French literature with the intention of teaching French in an American university.

Although a proud possessor of an ample dark beard, Bowen receives a weekly milk ration, available to all those 21 and under. He assures friends, however, he was smooth-shaven when applying for the ration.

Another student who is planning to return to America to teach French is Helen Stephens, one of the five girls in the group. Miss Stephens, 28, of 709 Ingraham st. nw., Washington, is a 1942 graduate of University of Maryland. She worked from 1942 until 1948 in the Hispanic Exchange of the university.

Searched Catacombs

ALBERT M. BODIAN, 26, a native of New Jersey, who recently completed a semester at College Park, has written a book entitled "Dominion of Death."

He describes his work, which he hopes to have published in England, as the "evolution of the poetic idea of death." Much of the material was gathered by digging about in the Paris Catacombs, and inspecting with a flashlight inscriptions carved on the walls.

The students take special end-of-course examinations (French students having no course exams), write a thesis, and also take an oral exam on the thesis for the most part entirely in French.

Dr. and Mrs. Quynn are both experts on the subject of France, Dr. Quynn in literature and Mrs. Quynn in medieval history. Mrs. Quynn also has a doctorate—actually a "docteur de l'Universite de Paris en histoire."

Dr. and Mrs. Quynn have each spent a total of 5½ years in France, doing research, writing and teaching. They plan to return to America in time for the fall term at College Park, but are admittedly sad at the thought of leaving their present post.

One of their most vivid impressions of France today, as compared to the country they knew before the war, is the warm reception now given Americans. They remember, for example, the days between the two wars when Americans were none too well liked by many Frenchmen.

This change is certainly due to many different factors, they say, such as the American role in the French liberation and now the Marshall Plan and Atlantic Pact. But they hope that the "Maryland Plan," and others like it, can also do their share in strengthening this international understanding and goodwill.

A New Goal Provided

ANN ARBOR, Mich., July 23 (AP).—Ten years ago, a lanky bespectacled professor looked across a mountain gorge in Iran at the famed carvings of the Persian King, Darius, chiseled on the face of Mount Behistun.

He leveled his camera on the 2400-year-old carvings. Almost at the same time, he snapped a mental shutter of resolve to complete scientific examination of the so-called "rosetta stone of western Asia."

Prof. George Cameron of the University of Michigan says now he is prepared to "fill every major gap" in the famous writings, ending a century of research.

Others had made resolutions about the ancient work. Sir Henry Rawlinson climbed halfway up the 9700-foot mountain in 1835 to copy the bas-relief of Darius and the 10 kings he vanquished. Columbia University's A. V. W. Jackson rechecked several lines of the inscription in 1903. In 1904, the British Museum sent an expedition to add to Rawlinson's and Jackson's findings.

But there were gaps in the story written in three languages in panels below and to the left of the 18-foot relief. And four columns of writings above and to the right of the "exquisitely" carved relief were described as "illegible" in earlier reports.

Began Last Fall

CAMERON, his wife, Frances, and sons, Douglas and Tom, arrived at the foot of Mount Behistun early in November and immediately encountered a labor problem.

Local workers were agreeable about helping until they were led up the mountain to a narrow ledge, above which towered the inscriptions of Darius the Great. There remained a 30-foot ladder climb, then a finger-and-toe-hold ascent of about 15 feet to the ledge upon which earlier expeditions had stood.

Nothing doing. Cameron offered as high as 20 times the wage paid for field labor. Nothing doing. Fortunately, two young Kurds named Hussain and Ali came to the rescue.

Steel pegs, 2 feet long, were driven into another ledge about 200 feet above the inscriptions. Cables were fixed to them and a 16-foot scaffold, equipped with two winches and guard rails was attached to the cables.

42 Trips Up Cliff

THEN Cameron, his son, Tom, and Hussain made the first of 42 scaffold trips up the face of sheer rock wall. Mrs. Cameron waited anxiously below.

Then came the laborious job of taking impressions of the carvings with a rubber compound. With Hussain and Tom working the winches and Cameron applying the sticky compound, the trio moved slowly over the face of the cliff.

Things went well for a week. Then the weather turned. For the remainder of the stay, the three had to don wool underwear, two sweaters apiece, two jackets and wrap themselves in blankets against the "frightfully cold" wind.

Rains came with added misery. A near-accident with the scaffold almost plunged all three to their deaths.

Back in the warmth of his own office Cameron terms the expedition a "complete success."

As evidence he shows impressions of the four previously untouched columns and enough other impressions to reconstruct the entire monument.

Also successful was the outcome of a "secondary" interest of the professor—how did the Persian workmen reach the site of the carvings?

Retracing his steps from the ledge back down the mountain, Cameron found a readily distinguishable path. The last 60 feet had been scraped away, presumably to prevent others from damaging the inscriptions.

Cameron now looks forward to reconstruction, from the rubber molds, of the complete monument.

Hotel Elicits Geddes' Praise

"If you consider the geography of the immediate vicinity, the variation of that geography and its vegetation; the relation of so modern an establishment in this environment; the beach, then the hotel itself, I honestly consider it superior to any in Bermuda, the Bahamas, Acapulco and the hotels of Florida and California."

With that statement, one of America's foremost designers of the theater, Norman Bel Geddes, paid tribute to Tower Isle Hotel, the fabulous new guest house which was opened early this year on the beautiful north coast of Jamaica.

Speaking of the attractiveness of the island in general, Geddes said: "I feel quite sad that Jamaica does not make better use of its incredible natural advantages over the other British islands such as Bermuda, the Bahamas, and the Latin-American islands of the Caribbean. All they have is nearness to the States.

"Yet Jamaica is only two hours farther from Miami than Nassau. It has a variety of geographical features away above the others. There is almost any kind of country and weather here. In my experience with the climate, one couldn't ask for more invigorating weather conditions."

Paul Fulcomer Heads Hamline U. Publicity

Appointment of Paul M. Fulcomer, 707 N. Wayne st., Arlington, as director of publicity at Hamline University, Methodist coeducational college in St. Paul, Minn., was announced yesterday by Dr. Hurst R. Anderson, Hamline president.

Fulcomer, one of the editors of Broadcasting magazine, national weekly radio trade journal, came to Washington in 1945 as assistant to the executive secretary of the International Association of Chiefs of Police. He has been with Broadcasting since November, 1946.

Whistle Stopping

Hoppity-Hop to Rehoboth

WITH WHOOPS of anticipation punctuated by muttered invective at pouring rain, Mr. Orval Hopkins departed this office and the Capital a week ago for the Rehoboth Beach he chasteneth and loveth. An ominous silence immediately enveloped Post Square.

Not for "Hoppy" till late July the steaming jungles of Potomac Park, the sullen, sepia-hued river, swollen by tropical cloudbursts, the mildew on clothing and mind which mark high summer hereabouts.

Let's hope the jellyfish visit the Delaware littoral early, mingled with a few Portuguese Men-of-War and perhaps a bevy of hammerhead sharks to serve him right for leaving us steaming in limbo! . . . But, having known Rehoboth from the days when it was spasmodically served by the Queen Anne "railroad," and the old British-built lighthouse still rose mistily from the Cape Henlopen dunes, we are gloomily certain Mr. Hopkins has hit the coast at the optimum season for enjoying billow, beach tent and Bacardi punch.

* * * *

HIS DESK and files exhibit nothing that could be otherwise construed than as a direct sneer at a town-bound substitute.

There's the usual waste basketful of cannily contrived press agentry from sea and mountain resort, from railroad, airline and steamship company. Why not leave right now? is their burden.

Somehow, the most exacerbative offering of all is a Cunard White Star announcement of a 54-day Mediterranean cruise next winter, the line's first in 14 years.

Sailing from New York January 28, the Britannic will call at Madeira, Casablanca, Algiers, Malta, Tel Aviv, Rhodes, Istanbul, Piraeus, Alexandria, Palermo, Naples, Genoa, Villefranche, Barcelona, Palma, Gibraltar and Lisbon.

Thus a lot of people who have successfully dodged the Guiana-like summer of Washington will with equal facility escape the slush-and-snivel travail of winter. And we'll be right here, putting on a few more gnarls like a wornout apple tree.

One consoling thought about this Mediterranean junket: There is a violent, bitter wind off the Alps known as the Mistral which, when the sun is skulking down in Capricorn, often makes things very unpleasant along the whole northwest coast of the Central Sea. Not so nice at Nice, if you follow.

Perhaps, by the end of January, it'll be hurtling down with sufficient strength to give the good motorship Britannic a cold rolling that'll make the trippers wish they were back on the dreamily meandering North River.

STILL at the marine etching: Everyone who has been the target of tourist literature from the shipping companies knows how anxious they are to assure the landlubber he'll hardly know he's at sea. The description of a liner conforms to the prospectus of a great resort hotel—so many bars, lounges, promenades, free shows, card rooms, swimming pools, auditoriums, deck games, etc. Nothing about a 50-foot bow smashing down into Atlantic rollers till the spray carries halfway up the funnels and the dining saloons are strangely deserted. The French Line had a phrase, "the longest gangplank in the world," which seemed to signify the passenger really never boarded ship at all—just strolled along a causeway from New York to Le Havre.

Something of the same thoughts occur regarding the opening of the Atlantic City race course on August 11. The nags already are in training (the pari-mutual operators don't need any) and the 45-day affair will draw a small army each day they run.

You seek the sea, then turn your back on it.

A proper antidote for such sacrilege is a solitary walk at night on a stretch of beach when a nor'easter is making up, or a long cruise on an accommodation boat—a freighter with a handful of staterooms. Stuff a 900-foot giant would cut through as shears through muslin will toss an ocean tramp around as brusquely as a railroad dick does the terrestrial variety.

IN MAINE you can collect up to $100 from the fish and game commissioner if a wild animal damages your car, according to the American Automobile Association. That is, if it's a "protected wild animal." How annoying to find, after a bull moose has stove in your radiator, that he wasn't a member of the union, but a scab from Canada.

"USE MEN'S handkerchiefs for wash rags; they dry very quickly," advises a Yonkers, N. Y., lady in a symposium of auto travel tips. There, in a phrase, you have the tragedy of Homo, the Sap, in these days of the gynecocracy, which is what the ethnologists call domination by women. Having preempted all his prerogatives and haunts, the women now snatch from him his last poor accessory with which to mop their tour-fevered faces. Indubitably, the handkerchief will dry quickly—and with it will dry, and set, enough lipstick and mascara to give it the color scheme of the old German merchant flag—black, red, white.—PHILIP A. ORME.

New Hampshire Offers Sea, Mountain, Forest Beauties

CONCORD, N. H., July 23.—If the main reason for a vacation is to relax in comfort and enjoy a variety of activities and scenic attractions, most vacationists, families, or groups will find New Hampshire able to fulfill their particular combination of requirements.

Although a small State, New Hampshire boasts a variety of scenery from seacoast beaches to the highest mountains in the northeastern United States. Luxuriant forests and high elevation combine to produce ideal vacation temperatures.

For more than a century, mountains, lakes and ponds have brought throngs of vacationists to New Hampshire. Early visitors were often overawed by the ruggedness of the scenery and the hazards of carriage travel over narrow roads skirting ravines.

Today the traveler motors in comfort on fine highways. Mount Washington itself, 6288 feet high, is accessible either by cog railway or auto road throughout the summer season. Many vacationists make an annual visit to the summit of Washington or other peaks in the Alpine zone of the Presidential Range.

Water Bodies Popular Too

MANY vacationists prefer to keep their toes in the water of one of the more than 1300 lakes and ponds in the Granite State. Some of these are small, secluded pools of only a few acres, while others are large lakes with cottage colonies, where favorite activities are motor boating, sailing, and other water sports.

Each of the six regions into which New Hampshire is divided has its own distinctive attraction and charm. Each is organized and has an exectuive secretary who will answer specific inquiries about features of his own region.

These regions have headquarters as follows: Dartmouth-Lake Sunapee Region, Box 181, Lebanon; Lakes, Wolfeboro; Merrimack Valley, Box 634, Manchester; Monadnock, Peterborough; Seacoast, Box 807, Portsmouth; and White Mountains, Woodsville.

Thousands of acres of New Hampshire forest and mountain terrain are preserved in the White Mountain National Forest and in State parks and reservations. In addition, the State each year is adding and improving more public bathing beaches. Largest of the State-operated bathing areas is at Hampton Beach State Park. Wellington State Park provides bathing and picnicking facilities on popular Newfound Lake. White Lake State Park, near Ossipee, offers camping in addition to bathing and picnicking, and the lake has been reclaimed and stocked with trout.

Other Swimming Areas

OTHER popular State areas which provide swimming and picnicking are located on Lake Wentworth, Wolfeboro; Echo Lake, North Conway; Endicott Rock, The Weirs, Lake Winnipesaukee; Forest Lake, Whitefield, in the popular Franconia Notch Area; Great Pond, Kingston; Kezar Lake, Sutton; Catamount Pond, Allenstown, and on a small artificial pond on Moose Brook, near Gorham.

Public campsites in State areas are provided as follows: Crawford Notch Reservation; Fox Forest Park, Hillsborough; Lafayette Place, Franconia Notch; Milan Hill State Park, Milan (north of the White Mountains); Monadnock State Park, on the south slopes of Mount Monadnock, near Jaffrey; Moose Brook State Park, Gorham, and at Mount Sunapee State Park, Mount Sunapee.

For further information of these and several other State parks which provide picnicking and mountain views, write to the New Hampshire Forestry and Recreation Department at Concord.

The White Mountain National Forest each year draws thousands of hikers. Most important of the National Forest camping areas in New Hampshire is Dolly Copp camp ground near Pinkham Notch, one of the largest and most popular camping areas in the East. Swimming is provided by an artificial pond.

Other White Mountain Forest camping areas are Cold River, North Chatham; Dugway, near Conway; Gale River, near Franconia; Oliverian, East Haverhill; Passaconaway; Waterville; White Ledge, near Mount Chocorua; Wild River, Bean's Purchase, and Zealand, Twin Mountain.

Use Own Judgment

PUBLIC campsites in the White Mountain National Forest may be used now that the camper feels the weather is warm enough, although early comers may not find the water turned on until mid-June. A folder describing National Forest campsites and trails may be obtained from the White Mountain National Forest Supervisor, Laconia, N. H.

The Appalachian Mountain Club maintains a system of hiking trails and eight huts in the White Mountain National Forest. The huts are planned to be a comfortable day's tramp apart and through use of their facilities the hiker is able to "travel light" without loss of comfort. Further information of Appalachian Mountain Club operations may be obtained from Joseph B. Dodge, Huts Manager, Gorham, N. H.

State and National Forest areas, as well as golf courses, tourist attractions, covered bridges, fishing waters, and a wealth of other information are listed on the New Hampshire Tourist Map, which is distributed by the State Planning and Development Commission.

At the Bridge Table

Hershey Tourney Draws Players From Capital

By Marian H. Barre

A SCORE or more of Capitalites are now in Hershey, Pa., enjoying "Chocolate Sunday." Several members of the group have been there since the start of the tournament on Friday. Among others playing in the women's game were Mrs. J. A. Dearing, Mrs. E. R. Shepherd, Mrs. George Kathan, and Mrs. Margaret Fisher. The tourney is being held under the joint auspices of the Harrisburg and York Bridge Leagues.

Annual championships are on also at Wrightsville Beach, N. C.—but probably without benefit of District competition. Our boys and girls are saving up for the big show in Chicago, the twenty-third annual World and National Championships at Hotel Stevens from July 30 to August 7. According to advance registrations it is to be "the biggest summer tournament the world has ever seen."

S. Garton Churchill, a former Washingtonian, is co-defender with Cecil Head of the ranking masters pair title; trophy for the event is the von Zedtwitz Gold Cup. When "Church" lived here the donor often came down to play with him, a gallery surrounding them at a respectful distance, for von Zedtwitz doesn't like kibitzers. Long known as a rebel against "systemized" bridge, Churchill's bidding theories are unique. He had a profound influence on some local experts.

Who is going to Chicago? Nearly everybody—"the Docs," McHugh and Gorton; C. C. Johnson, Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg, J. G. Stone, Miss Kathleen McNutt, Mrs. F. Millspaugh, Mrs. Elizabeth Count, et al.

The Count Club will be closed the Tuesday the manager is away, reopening for the master point game August 9. All other local bridge centers will remain open during the week of the Nationals.

MEANWHILE, the current week's schedule reads as follows:

Monday, 8 p. m., the Federal Bridge League's nationally-awarded monthly at 1300 New Hampshire ave.—open to nonmembers.

Tuesday, concluding session of the Chess Club's mixed pair championship.

Wednesday, 8 p. m., the Washington Bridge League at the Roosevelt Hotel.

Thursday, the Chess Club's master point match, restricted to members and guest card-holders.

Friday, initial session of concurrently-held men's and women's pair championships at Arlington Farms (for members and invited guests).

In addition, the usual rating point games will be held Monday evening and Thursday afternoon at La Salle Studios; Wednesday afternoon and Friday evening at Euclid Studios.

The annual individual match was concluded July 16 at the Walsh Club, Thomas J. Snyder nosing out 2 points ahead of Mrs. Charles Richter. First session leader Mrs. Wessal Stewart was not in the running in the final round, which was won by Mrs. Margaret Napper. Snyder receives two master points, plus the championship title.

NOT QUITE so many repeat wins made for a wider distribution of master points during the past week. At Arlington Farms, Mrs. Elizabeth Land and Mrs. F. Millspaugh took north-south awards, while points for the other position were split between the tied partnerships of Mrs. T. M. Boyle-Mrs. Adele Blassangame, Capt. J. L. Herlihy-Maj. M. Cicconi. Mrs. C. W. Zimmer-Mrs. M. H. Barre were runners-up.

Mrs. D. E. Stephan-A. E. Lane and the J. D. Boyds topped Euclid Studio fields, with two ties for second positions between Mrs. S. H. Beasley-S. Katz, Mrs. A. Scruggs-Major Cicconi, the Karl Itkins and Mrs. R. S. DuBois-Mrs. M. Goodstein.

At LaSalle Studios the winners were Captain and Mrs. Herlihy, Mrs. Hal H. Cook and Mrs. Zimmer; half-points going to Mrs. J. A. Dearing-Mrs. E. R. Shepherd, Cols. J. G. Seabourne and H. A. Walker.

Results of the first session of the Chess Club's mixed pair championship will not be posted until just before the finals go into play on Tuesday evening, but according to the grapevine the leaders are Mrs Margaret Fisher and J. G. Stone. Trophy for the event is a new one, donated by Mrs. T. M. Boyle in memory of Dr. J. B. Gregg Custis, beloved president of the club, who died February 28.

Europeans Take to Bus

BY SHIP and plane thousands of Americans will leave the United States for Europe in the next two months. Some are making their first trip, while others have visited the Continent many times.

They will find many things different than before the war. One of the postwar developments in Europe is the rise of bus travel which has become popular in Europe only within the last three years.

Swedish Trans European Bus Lines (Linjebuss) operates a network of routes throughout northern, western and southern Europe. The coaches are modern, with two drivers, a hostess, snack bar, radio, lavatories, and reclining seats.

That Hot Sun Will Do Your Car No Good

By Carol Lane

ONLY about one owner in ten realizes that the blazing hot sun of July and August can damage his car as much as the sub-zero freezes of January and February.

The next time you burn yourself on the sun-exposed parts of your car, remember these points:

(1) Check tires carefully for worn and weak spots and be careful not to over-inflate since heat causes air to expand. That expansion might cause a blowout.

(2) In hot weather, keep a constant check on the cooling system temperature and make certain the water is checked every time you fill the gasoline tank.

(3) Take the advice of your service station operator on what grade of oil to use. He has a chart for your car.

(4) It's important to have your car inspected and lubricated every 1000 miles. A good safety precaution.

(5) Always park in the shade, if you have a choice; and summertime is no excuse to leave the car exposed overnight if you have a garage.

As in winter driving, the best guarantee for pleasurable summer driving is a combination of common sense and a mechanically well-kept car.

Swedish Liner Sets a Record

The Swedish motorliner Stockholm arrived recently from Gothenburg after the fastest crossing ever made by ship between Gothenburg and New York with an elapsed time of 7 days, 19 hours and 19 minutes. Capt. C. O. Claesson said that this is 3 hours and 26 minutes less than the previous mark also set by the Stockholm in May, 1948.

The Stockholm, built at Goetaverkin, Gothenburg, entered the Swedish American Line service in February last year. A motorship equipped with two Diesel motors, she has exceeded the contracted speed of 19 knots on practically every crossing. The ship, of 11,650 register tons, carries 400 passengers in two classes. On eastbound voyages the ship makes Copenhagen, Denmark, a port of call.

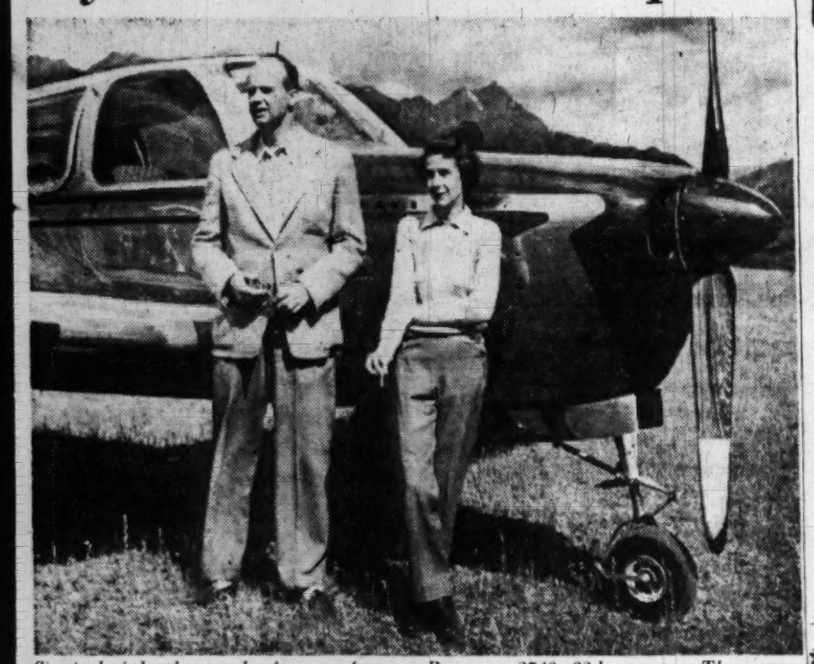
95,997 Private Planes

Skytourists Fill Slack Spots



Typical of the thousands of young American couples now vacationing on their own wings are Mr. and Mrs. Carleton Putnam, 2740 32d st. nw. They are shown beside their plane at Jasper Park Lodge in the Canadian Rockies

By Everett J. Wood
President, Skytours, Inc.

THE skytourist—the personal aircraft owner—represents a new and steadily growing class of travelers. Resorts equipped to cater to this class of tourist find it a most profitable addition to their present business.

Skytourists know no distance or season but, favored with good weather, travel the year round. Therefore, resorts find in them an excellent stop-gap during dull periods and a tendency to lengthen their seasons.

Today there are 95,997 civilian-owned aircraft in the United States. Each year shows a steady increase. After the thrill and novelty of learning to fly a personal plane have worn off the owner finds that its greatest usefulness is for travel. The personal aircraft owner is taking advantage of this fact to see and enjoy more of this wonderful country in which we live. To him have been opened new horizons, new experiences, and a broader and fuller life.

Compared with other modes of travel, the personal plane offers many advantages: It is quick; it is safe as any other means of transportation; it is clean; it is inexpensive (Capt. William Odom's recent 5300-mile flight from Honolulu to New York in a standard popular four-place personal plane required only $75 for fuel).

Always New Scenes

BY AIR one travels to new places, over enchanting vistas of green pastures, blue lakes and streams, mountains and plains, to places of natural, scenic, historic, and recreational enjoyment.

The personal aircraft owner has a tool for traveling. With it he can yield to his whim or mood and without much planning or preparation. Upon short notice he is able to hop off in his plane and in a few hours spend a day or a weekend at some distant place of his choice. Thus he is inclined to travel more often, bypass the overcrowded popular resort and seek those unusual, out-of-the-way places. There he finds more privacy and new friends.

With all these favorable characteristics is it any wonder that travel by personal plane is increasing every year?

Skytours, Inc., Box 120, Swarthmore, Pa., was organized over three years ago to represent the personal aircraft owner who is seriously intent upon the use of his plane for traveling, and to encourage and promote better facilities and accommodations for his convenience. Through careful study and planning, endless miles of travel, and the cooperation of resort managers, chambers of commerce, CAA, and other State and civic organizations, much has been accomplished.

Skytours maintains a constant survey covering not only the United States but Canada and Mexico. There are a very large number and variety of interesting places that can be reached by air. These are written up in bulletin form and passed on to Skytourists. From this, Skytours representatives have selected a small number of resorts which offer the finest in hospitality and entertainment and are especially equipped to anticipate the need of "fly-in" guests. This special group, now numbering 17, has been organized as a separate division of Skytours and is known as Skytours Air Resorts, a national chain.

Finds New Friends

THE managers of Skytours air resorts are themselves organization members and understand the problems and thinking of the air tourist. When the flying traveler visits these resorts he finds new friends with much in common, speaking the same language; there is an immediate bond of friendliness and fellowship that dispels any commercial atmosphere and which means so much to what is often the lonely traveler. These resorts have their own board of directors; its chairman is Rocco Bunino, Sunset Villa, Blairstown, N. J.

Skytours, Inc., is largely supported by a yearly membership fee paid by the Skytourist, who is supplied all necessary air travel information covering resorts, places of interest, eating accommodations, and technical airport and ground transportation data. The Skytourist has a personal identification card which introduces him to all Skytours air resorts where he receives special courtesies and discounts. He is made to feel that he is a definite part of a growing movement and that these resorts are his clubs, his rendezvous while traveling.

Leaving City? Close House Up Properly

UNLESS vacationists close up their houses properly before leaving town, they may return home to trouble, according to the warning of Franklin J. Bruzbart of the American Automobile Association.

He suggested that milk and newspapers be stopped before the family leaves for its vacation. He said also that shades should not be drawn, nor should there be any note on the door to let callers know you are away. All windows and doors should be locked securely, he said, and it's a bad practice to leave a door key in the usual hiding place.

Bruzhart recommended that all woolen clothing and blankets be stored away in moth-proof closets and that the piano be closed, after moth balls are scattered in it.

"If you take these precautions," he said, "you are more likely to have peace of mind on your vacation. Moreover, you won't face bad news when you return."

Fall Vacation Rates Lower

A few years ago July and August were the most generally accepted vacation months. Recently, however, many vacationers have found that it pays, in more ways than one, to vacation in June or September. For one thing rates are lower during those months and accommodations are less crowded. According to Everett F. Greaton, Maine Development Commission executive-director and also president of the National Association of Travel Officials, "a great many Maine people" choose June or September rather than July and August for their vacations.

"During both June and September our Maine weather is magnificent and all facilities for vacation enjoyment are provided. With fewer patrons to care for, hotel, inn and lodge proprietors can give you better service than they can during the peak vacation months.

"In late years an increasing number of honeymooners have come to Maine in June. Hotel, inn and lodge proprietors go to great lengths to make their stay in Maine as pleasant as possible.

"For those who like fishing, June is by far the best month. Fishing is at its very best then, particularly for trout and salmon. Other sports that may be enjoyed to the fullest then are golf, tennis, sailing, canoeing, mountain climbing and hiking," Groton said.

"Although operational costs have gone up most Maine proprietors are "holding the line" on prices.

Virginia's Valley Routes Offer Something Novel

IF YOU plan a motoring vacation this summer, the State Highway Department's road information service suggests that your itinerary include one or more of Virginia's scenic "valley routes."

Valley highways like U. S. Route 11, moving down the famed Shenandoah Valley, are known to motorists throughout the Nation. But, because they range a bit off the beaten path, many other scenic valley routes are little-known to the traveler.

For instance, said the highway department, the vacationist who spends his two weeks with pay on wheels would do well to investigate the scenic attractions of State Highway 12 down the Page Valley from Front Royal to Elkton.

Following the broad Shenandoah, with the Blue Ridge to the east and the Massanutten range to the west, Route 12 parallels U. S. 11. From Elkton it continues through Waynesboro and joins U. S. 11 south of Stanton.

Another scenic valley highway is U. S. 220, following the Jackson River down Warm Springs Valley. From the West Virginia line to Covington, this route passes through Healing Springs famed since colonial days. Hot Springs, Warm Springs and Healing Springs are along U. S. 220.

Farther west is the Clinch Valley, from Bluefield in Hansonville. Following the Clinch Valley is U. S. 19.

A good U. S. Forest Service highway through Fort Valley near Front Royal leads the traveler down a narrow, scenic valley in George Washington National Forest, far from the heavy travel of the main routes. Leaving Route 55 at Waterlick (between Strasburg and Front Royal), U. S. Forestry Route 74 (State Secondary Route 678) is hard-surfaced for nearly 14 miles, shale-surfaced to near Camp Roosevelt, where Secondary Route 616 takes the motorist through a mountain pass and over to U. S. 11.

Another off-the-beaten-path valley highway is Route 269 from McDowall to Millboro Springs in mountainous Highland and Bath Counties. This route, unpaved but with a good stone surfacing, follows the Cowpasture River down the valley.

In the far western tip of the Old Dominion, the motorist will find some of southwest Virginia's imposing scenery along U. S. 58 from Jonesville to Cumberland Gap. A wide valley is rimmed on either side by the Cumberland and Powell Mountains.

Route 39 through Goshen Pass affords a variety of river and mountain scenery. Between Lexington and Goshen, this route follows the Maury River.

Hotel Course Given In Nova Scotia

Hotel and resort operators gathered recently in Halifax from all sections of Nova Scotia to attend the annual Hotel Short Course, a three-day instructional period covering everything from frying scallops to interior decorating, with tips on courtesy and sanitation. The school was directed by Mrs. Josephine Davison, chief hotel inspector for the province, assisted by Fred T. Irwin, provincial supervisor of hotel services.

Opening the course, Dr. Douglas L. Cooper, Acting Deputy Minister of Trade and Industry, predicted the tourist trade eventually would surpass in importance the fishing and manufacturing industries of Nova Scotia.

Some Books on Travel

By W. G. Rogers

SWITZERLAND, edited by Dore Ogrizek and J. G. Rufenacht, with illustrations in color and black and white (Whittlesey House, $5); THE WEST OF ENGLAND, by Ruth Manning-Sanders, illustrated with prints and photos (Batsford, $3.75); LET'S GO TO GUATEMALA, by Lyman Judson and Ellen Judson (Harper, $4); GASPE: LAND OF HISTORY AND ROMANCE, by Blodwen Davies, photos by George Driscoll (Greenberg, $4.50).

Most travel writers, like most travelers, are sentimental people who can't find a thing wrong with the countries they visit. After telling you about laundry, rail and hotel rates, tips and so on, they fill in with historical, political, archeological, artistical and other lore. And they always have a fund of stories: How the hotel door was locked against them, how they asked for water and somebody thought they meant when do the fireworks start, how they recovered their lost luggage, how the native looked like a robber, but proved to have run a restaurant in New York for 25 years . . . which is perhaps not incongruous at that.

Of these volumes, the book on England is the most personal and intimate, the one on Guatemala the most useful for the hurried traveler. If I had my choice I'd go to Switzerland, partly because of the book, partly because of Switzerland. (AP).

Standard barnstormers' thriller is to cut motor, have passenger struggle to start propeller, then glide into a landing on a dead motor. Customers love it.

Grand finale of Newton-McGinnis airshow: Earl Newton flys a condemned plane, and after making two passes at a specially built barrier, crashes it at 80 miles an hour.

Even though stunt isn't as dangerous as it looks, Newton's wife is relieved after crash. Steel pilot cabin and shoulder harness to stop forward pitching protect Newton.

Barnstormers Are Back

Like daredevil "aviators" of 30 years ago, today's aerobats curdle spectators' blood with fast thrills.

This is part of crowd of 5,000 who thrilled to aerobatics.

THE DAREDEVIL BARNSTORMER is again packing them in at small airfields across the country.

During the last few years the number of air-circuses that have accounted for tens of thousands of stiff-necks and missed heart-beats has increased from zero to about 20. The 1949 stunt men, however, are unlike their slam-bang, 1919 forerunners.

For one thing, the present day stunters have to fly under regulations of the Civil Aeronautics Board. And in many ways they are better airmen because of it. Yet they pull off their hair-raising acts with such seeming recklessness that the audience is unaware of the skill and coordination really at work.

Most of the teams are operating on the West Coast, but on the eastern seaboard is one of the maddest teams of them all. It consists of two wild men, Earl Newton, of Philadelphia, and Walt McGinnis, of Hatboro, Pa.

For a 50 cent side bet between themselves they "race to earth," jumping from a plane at 5,000 feet, pulling the parachute ripcord below 1,000.

THRILLS FOR THE SPECTATORS

That's the sort of thing they do just for the fun of it. What will they do for money? One recent Sunday afternoon at the airfield at Harrington, Del., 5,000 spectators found out.

Newton and McGinnis put on a series of stunts that scared the daylights out of everybody.

They flew through an entire afternoon with "ribbon-pick-ups" (see photograph) delayed parachute jumps, precision flying, wing-walking, and other capers. The finale was a blood-chilling swoop by Newton who came down from the sky and crashed his flimsy plane into a barrier at 80 miles an hour, without injuring himself.

A serious interest in flying led Newton, who drives a bus for a living, and McGinnis, a factory worker, into their week-end shenanigans. But the thrills and a chance for quick money were added inducements.

They found thrills-a'plenty. But for most of the aerial comedians, Newton-McGinnis included, the money just isn't there. Although 5,000 people may be enthralled by a show, only 20 percent buy their way into a field. Others remain outside and watch.

Still, Newton and McGinnis feel they'll hit the jackpot. Meanwhile, there are the thrills. But there ought to be an easier way for men to make a living.

Walt McGinnis, precision flyer, is about to go through 40-ft. space between trees with only 10-ft. clearance.

With his brother, Allan, as passenger, Newton taxis "crash" plane, an old one (cost $100) to takeoff point.

More dangerous than crash, "ribbon pick-up" requires split-second timing between pilot and Newton.

The Turning Point

HECTOR CHEVIGNY: He decided that life was still worth living . . .

"PUT IT THIS WAY," said the calm voice. "Sometimes there comes a point in your life when you feel like shooting yourself. But you don't. In a way, that's a turning point. If later you're glad that you didn't, it proves you were right."

The speaker was "blind" Hector Chevigny, top-flight writer of radio and television scripts, magazine stories, and books, including the current "The Woman of the Rock," a lively novel about a lady religious leader in Los Angeles.

Almost everyone with a radio has listened to a Chevigny program. Thousands of television fans have seen them acted out. Millions of readers have read his stories and books. Few know he is blind.

Born 44 years ago in Missoula, Mont., he began his career as editor of the Spokane, Wash., County News, broke into radio via Seattle's station KOMO in 1928, moved to Hollywood a few years later as one of its most promising radio and movie script writers. In November, 1943, at what seemed the height of his career, he went to New York on a business trip. It was the bigtime at last. Ten days later, his sight fuzzed and glimmered out. By next spring, three operations later, he was told it was gone for good. He faced a heart-breaking future.

Other men might have done other things. (He confesses he considered everything.) In the end, he pulled himself together, told his wife and his daughter he intended to go on writing. He got a Seeing Eye dog and a secretary and went to work.

WRITES THOUSAND SCRIPTS

In the five years since, he has turned out over 1,000 radio scripts, including hundreds for the Morton Downey show, his own "Plays By Ear" for NBC, half the current "Mr. & Mrs. North" series for CBS. Last year he televised "Chevrolet on Broadway" for TV-NBC, wrote (1) several short stories and articles for magazines, (2) an interpretation of blindness ("My Eyes Have a Cold Nose"), and (3) his novel.

THE COVER: On a sunny day, wheat farmer Bert Dunagan, of Olney, Texas, whose brother's story is told on page 8, examines some of the winter wheat that brought a prize—and headaches. Clouds soon covered the sun: rains set in. Farmers' troubles were just beginning. Yet this year's crop may approach record.

Comfortable in open-collar shirt, assistant secretary Elmer P. Rinal wears summer garb of employees of Akron Savings and Loan Co.

Shirtsleeve Bankers

Akron customers rubbed their eyes . . . But so far there have been no complaints

SEEING A BANKER in shirtsleeves is like seeing an admiral in overalls. You just rub your eyes.

That's just what customers of the Akron (Ohio) Savings and Loan Co. did one day this summer—until they discovered that the fault lay with the bankers—not with their eyes. There were the bankers — in shirtsleeves — and, yes, minus even their ties.

This assault on tradition was an idea of Savings and Loan Co. president A. E. "Arch" Albright, one banker who would rather work in comfort than "swelter in style."

Early this summer, Albright's bank bought eight dozen open-collar, cool-weave sports shirts. Albright distributed six to each employee. The results have been all that Albright hoped for. Employee and customer reaction has been unanimously favorable, and, already, several other firms have followed Albright's lead.

Albright is enthusiastic about emancipating the bankers. "Shirtsleeves," he says, "are just common sense."

Brighter teeth, cleaner breath in 7 days—or Double Your Money Back!

WHY FILM MUST BE REMOVED

1. FILM collects stains that make teeth look dull
2. FILM harbors germs that breed bad breath
3. FILM glues acid to your teeth
4. FILM never lets up—it forms continually on everyone's teeth

Now Faster Foaming!
Make this 7-day Pepsodent Test!

In just 7 days, new improved Pepsodent will bring a thrilling brightness to your teeth, new freshness to your breath—or we'll return twice what you paid!

New Pepsodent Tooth Paste foams wonderfully—goes to work faster, fighting film: (1) Pepsodent makes short work of the discoloring stains that collect on film. (2) It routs film's "bad breath" germs that cause food particles to decay. (3) Pepsodent helps protect you from acid produced by germs that lurk in film. This acid, many dentists agree, is the cause of tooth decay. (4) Film forms continually. Remove it regularly and quickly with Pepsodent.

Buy New Pepsodent now on our double-your-money-back guarantee. No other tooth paste can duplicate Pepsodent's film-removing formula! No other tooth paste contains Irium*—or Pepsodent's gentle polishing agent. For the safety of your smile use Pepsodent twice a day—see your dentist twice a year.

*Irium is Pepsodent's registered trade mark for purified alkyl sulfate.

In Defense of Parents

By JOHN FROSCH, M.D.

THE DOORBELL RINGS at the same time as the telephone. Upstairs the baby is yowling for milk at the top of its voice. In the backyard a bloodcurdling shriek arises — Junior is pulling Sister's hair. The dishes are lying unwashed in the sink.

Faced with all this, Mother, according to some psychologists, is supposed to preserve her equanimity, display tact, charm, deep psychological understanding to her children, and not show the slightest tremor of exasperation. What's more, she's not even supposed to feel it.

I'd like to meet that mother. As a matter of fact, I have — right in my office, as a patient.

"I feel I'm a failure as a mother," she told me. "I find myself getting irritated at my children. They do such things—I keep finding myself wanting to say 'no' to them more often than I feel is right. I don't want to reject or inhibit them, yet I can't let them do all the things they want. I feel terribly inadequate."

This was a personable woman, in her late twenties, but obviously distressed, tense and depressed. There had been others like her before—the mother who feels she is failing her child because she finds herself reacting to it with feelings contrary to the best teachings of child upbringing—or at least what she thinks the best teachings are.

PROTECT JUNIOR'S INITIATIVE

Like many others, this mother was afraid that if she restricted her child she would be frustrating and rejecting it, and that could lead to dire consequences. If she became annoyed at something the child was doing, even if it was destructive, she mustn't restrict it, because this would interfere with the child's personality and initiative.

How did this mother and many others like her get that way? Was there something to what she said? Was she right about the best opinions of psychiatrists and others who are concerned with problems of child upbringing?

Actually, a great deal has been attributed to psychiatry which arises out of misinterpretations and misconceptions. It is really very difficult to tell a parent the absolutely correct way of bringing up a child. Each parent-child relationship is a unique and specific one. Although there are some feelings among experts about general attitudes to be taken in this relationship, hard rules as to what a parent should do and should not do under certain circumstances just do not work out.

Psychiatrists studying personality development have found that in many instances severe disturbances in the parent-child relationship may interfere markedly with the child's development.

For example, Dr. Rene Spitz, a well-known New York psychoanalyst, studied a group of children deprived of close contact with their mothers. He compared them with another group, also in an institution, but where mothers were permitted closer contact with them.

The differences in development of these two groups of children were astounding. The deprived children were retarded in their total development, not only emotionally but intellectually and physically. Amazingly enough, the children of the deprived group, in spite of excellent medical care, seemed to have very little resistance to infections, their death rate was shockingly high as compared with the other group.

Studies of this sort have tended to highlight the extreme importance of a good child-parent relationship for the healthy development of the child. On the other hand, other studies have shown that a child exposed to a very rigid and restrictive upbringing suffered markedly in his subsequent personality development.

Reports of this type unquestionably have tended to make the modern parent keenly aware of the importance of a good relationship with his child. Many modern parents have considered corporal punishment the depth of degraded child-parent relationship. To them, the child who was slapped by that ogre parent was sure to develop into a delinquent or a neurotic.

Popular articles have tended to exploit these parental anxieties. Innumerable stories highlighting the rejecting parent and pointing up the failure of parents, aroused grave misgivings in the minds of parents who felt that by preventing Junior from breaking a lamp in the living room they were frustrating a future physicist. This attitude is epitomized by the following story:

THE RESPONSE DIRECT

An amiable old gentleman walking in the park saw a youngster playing alone. With a smile he asked the child: "What school do you go to, little boy?" He received a prompt answer: "What business is it of yours?" "Oh," replied the old gentleman, "you go to a progressive school, don't you?"

The mother previously described, and hundreds of others like her, wouldn't trust her own impulses in coping with Junior. She developed guilt feelings and fears that she would be responsible for a future catastrophe. These guilt feelings interfered not only with her own happiness but paralyzed her in dealing with her children.

But just what are the actual facts? Do psychiatrists really mean the child is to be permitted to do everything it wants lest it be frustrated? Do they consider discipline of any sort taboo?

The answer is that this idea, like many others, is a distortion and a misconception of what most reputable psychiatrists actually believe. It is unquestionable that over-indulgence may easily have just as dire consequences as over-restriction.

After all, isn't it unrealistic to permit a child to do whatever he wants under all circumstances? He isn't going to be living in the sort of world that will tolerate that behavior, and in the long run he will probably suffer

THE AUTHOR of this article, Dr. John Frosch, is senior psychiatrist at famous Bellevue Psychiatric Hospital in New York, edits the American Psychoanalytical Association magazine.

She's developing her art—on the wallpaper. The art's fine, but her mother will have to tell her about walls.

Who's going to be the boss—you or Junior? He wants your control severely if he persists in such a belief.

We are simple human beings. We are not perfect. We have our likes and dislikes, our periods of anger and annoyance, our tolerances and intolerances. Just because we happen to be parents it is too much to expect us to become perfect human beings overnight.

Let's not kid ourselves. Many situations do arise where we feel exasperated with the children and have an overwhelming desire to yell at Junior to cut it out. If we do, what will happen? I do not say that this is the best way to deal with the situation, but let's be realistic and accept limitations in ourselves as well as in life.

HOW TO LIVE WITH OTHERS

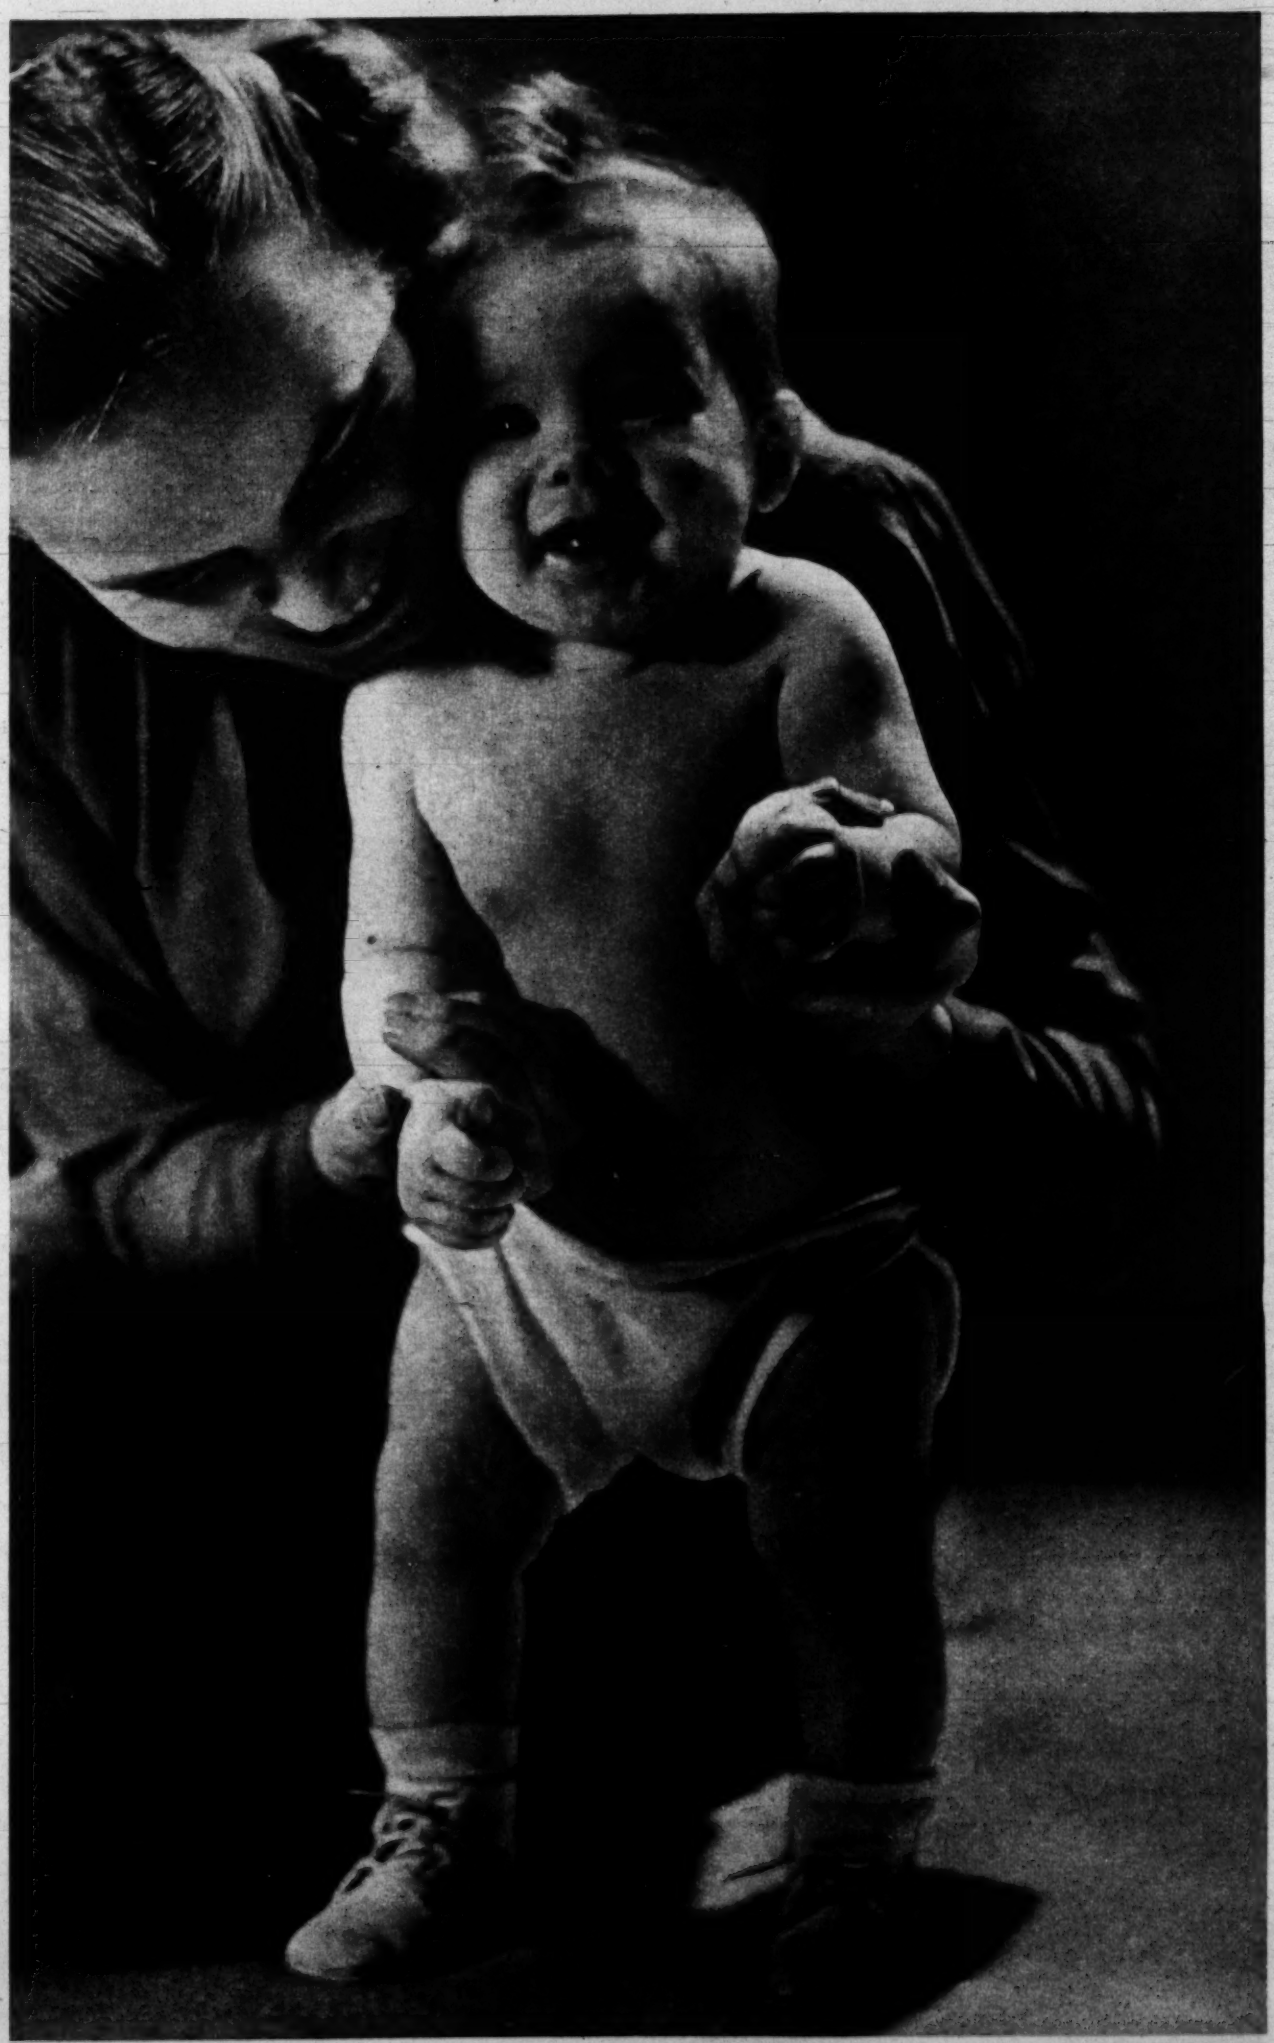
Living with others means having some degree of restraint. Growing up to a large extent consists of learning how to live with others and to restrain such impulses as may lead us into difficulties. Perhaps the word discipline is too old-fashioned. Whatever you call it, it does play an integral role in child development. We expect very little of the infant but as it grows older we expect more renunciation of certain activities which if given full play would ultimately lead to disaster. Not only is such judicious restraint necessary, but I will go a step farther and say that in general the child seeks it and desires it. He wants the help of the adult in learning how to curb and redirect his aggressive impulses. If this help is not forthcoming he resents it, and feels it as an indication that the parent is not interested.

This is not a green signal to vent your spleen on your child. Far from it. But if you sometimes prevent Junior from breaking the furniture or tell him he will have to put away his toys at night, it will not lead to a nervous breakdown. Provided, that is, that the overall relationship is such that the child senses you love him and that in spite of momentary disagreement, is fundamentally sure you care for him.

CHILDHOOD'S GOAL: SECURITY

If the parents have that feeling for the child, he will know it, and the sporadic ructions and disagreements are not going to ruin the relationship. Basically, the child seeks security and finds it in the love of his parents. If it's there, he will accept the fact that his parents are human, have feelings, can get angry and that everything in the world is not sweetness and light.

Let us accept the fact that none of us is perfect and as parents every bit of our resources is being taxed constantly. But if you love your child he will sense it and not be afraid of you. You will do lots of things that perhaps should have been handled differently but fundamentally it will not ruin the relationship between you and the child. And that is the most important thing.



On the whole a child expects and desires restraint, and is disappointed if it doesn't get it, says Dr. Frosch.

Farmer John Dunagan, of Olney, Texas, harvested year's first wheat to win annual award. But harvest troubles since have brought him price headaches.

Part of Dunagan's troubles are due to the enormous 1949 crop, expected to approach a record. Great combines began the harvest on Dunagan's farm, are working slowly into Canada.

Here Comes The Wheat!

Johnnie Dunagan of Texas harvested 1949's first bushels, but now he is not sure it was worth all the trouble he had

By ERNEST LA FRANCE and SID ROSS

"Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour the mill,
And back of the mill is the wheat . . ."
—Maltbie Babcock

SOMETIME in the next few weeks, under the high-tumbling skies of Montana, North Dakota and Minnesota, a clattering, mechanized army of tractors and harvesters will sweep to the finale of one of 1949's greatest dramas—getting in the last of the U.S. crop of winter wheat. It's estimated in advance to reach a near-record total of 1,036,710,000 bushels.

As rough-and-tumble as a log drive and as chancy as a crap game, the marathon harvest got off to a start a thousand miles to the south. There, at Olney, Texas, 43-year old wheatman Johnnie Dunagan won his place in the wheat-belt's Hall of Fame by racing in with 1949's first marketable bushels.

Involving 62,000 men (13,000 of them migrant workers from other states) in the Texas Panhandle alone, Operation Wheatfield got under way last May. It boomed up out of Texas in June, mushroomed over a dozen states, will end in the windy steppes of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba a month from now. This year, it has been even more exciting than usual. Perhaps too exciting.

For one thing, rains in some states weighed the wheatheads too low for the cutter-blades and bogged the heavy combines knee-deep in mud. An already glutted market sent prices skittering below even the Government's $1.87 a bushel. Scarce storage and embargoed freight cars added to the growers troubles. By this month, the harvest had caused high blood pressures all the way from the farms to the Chicago wheat pit. And vote-conscious Washington politicians got the jitters.

Few farmers had a more hectic time than first-harvester Johnnie Dunagan himself. Early on the morning of May 20, after talking gloomily about the weather with neighbor Walt Timmons, he and his younger brother Bert drove his 1941 Ford pickup truck out along State Highway 79 to his 206 acres of Black Hull wheat in northern Throckmorton County.

As usual, they stripped a wheathead, rubbed husks from kernels between calloused fingers, popped the kernels into their mouths and bit. If too "doughy" it would be rejected as too damp for safe storage. It was just about right. "I guess she's ready," said Bert.

Racing as fast as wheels could turn, they ran Bert's McCormack-Deering tractor and a combine into the field at 11:30 a.m., harvested 50 bushels. They delivered them to older brother Joe at the Olney Gin Company 14 miles away at exactly 1:55 p.m. for $1.96 a bushel.

Scoop on news of Dunagan's feat was scored by Alf Evans of Olney Enterprise. But two days later, Dunagan's jinx began.

An hour and thirty-five minutes later, another farmer named Mike Hartmangruber raced a load onto the scales of the Lennie Southard Elevator in Iowa Park, to the northeast, to the accompaniment of popping flash-bulbs and cheers by reporters who had not yet heard of Dunagan's bushels.

But Dunagan finally won recognition and a $50 prize. He found, however, that there were headaches to come. Most of his wheat was still in the field and clouds were forming.

Pard (1 can): 100% of daily caloric needs for 20 lb. dog

Pard provides the complete balanced diet every dog needs every day. Tasty . . . that lamb chop dinner! And nourishing! But it's no more nutritious than the dish of rich, meaty-red PARD.

PARD is better balanced too. It's a complete, one-dish dinner—gives your dog all the known essential ingredients. When you feed PARD, no additional meat—nothing more—is ever needed.

Every can of PARD contains all the minerals, fats, carbohydrates, vitamins and calories your dog is known to need. Feeding tests on generations of dogs in Swift's kennels have proved that PARD helps assure robust health and vigor when it is fed regularly.

Remember: when you feed your dog PARD, he needs nothing more . . . he can get nothing better!

Ready for harvest 1,500 cars waited at Wichita Falls, Tex.

The prices went down

THE 1949 HARVEST JINX showed up while Dunagan was still trying to get used to being famous.

Two days after his decision to start harvesting a thunderstorm drenched the fields. Hail followed the rain, and by the next morning (a Monday) the wheat was lying too low to harvest and the field was a bog. On Tuesday and Wednesday, it rained all over again and he sloshed gloomily around the machines.

On Friday, the wheat was dry enough (less than 14 percent moisture) but the price had fallen all the way from the $1.96 per bushel of a week ago to $1.76. Wheat traders, $50 bond is handed Dunagan by Worth Coffey, secretary of Olney Chamber of Commerce. It was prize for first wheat.

But by the time most of Dunagan's wheat was ready railroads were refusing storage loads (see text).

and tempers went up in '49's jinxed harvest alarmed at predictions of a bumper harvest coming on top of 300,000,000 bushels still left over from last year, and a threatened scarcity of storage space, were buying cautiously. Dunagan sold 170 bushels at $1.76. But by the time he rushed back with another load, the price had fallen to $1.68. He feverishly harvested and sold two more loads. Then darkness and dampness stopped work.

On Saturday, the price went down to $1.60. Dunagan, hearing the news after his truck had started toward the elevator, raced to stop it in his 1948 Chevvie sedan, met it on the way back.

Theoretically, a wheat farmer faced with falling prices could deliver to a government storage elevator and get a rock-bottom $1.87 a bushel loan on it, repaying the government for past loans if commercial prices went up. But the wheat had to be actually accepted at an actual elevator. The alternative was to pile wheat on the ground temporarily and pray for dry weather and high prices.

With new thunderheads darkening the sky, the rumor went around that the elevators had stopped buying, and that the 1,500 railroad cars that had been waiting on the siding for a quick harvest were refusing any wheat not definitely sold. Near-panic broke out when the price went down to $1.58. Things weren't quite as bad as that price would indicate, but they were bad enough. Elevators were doling out acceptances to regular customers, usually 10 per cent of each farmer's crop.

Dunagan feverishly raced two combines around his field to get as much wheat as possible in government bins. One Olney farmer angrily phoned Secretary of Agriculture Brannan in Washington demanding to know why elevators were slowing sales and why the government didn't provide more storage space. Desperate knots of farmers discussed cutting open crude oil tanks for use as granaries, and commandeering empty stores and schools. To make things even more exciting, the usual hordes of migrant workers and combines from Oklahoma and north Texas poured into the Olney area to help with the harvest Dunagan had started. Farmers who couldn't find storage started to sell for $1.50.

Finally, a week later, while standing on a tractor-pulled plow, Dunagan slipped and was struck by the rear furrow wheel. He went to the hospital for ten days—a gash in his right leg.

Getting out slightly less than a month after his hour of triumph, he totalled the profits of his 206 acres. All told, he made $4,416 (including $3,336 as a loan on part of his wheat). Costs came to $2,060. (They included seeds, wages of a helper at planting time last October, $3 an acre to his brother to rent and run two combines, and extra help.) Then the rent, 25 per-cent of his gross revenue, came to $1,104. Net profit: about $1,250 and a bad leg.

Later, on the radio, he heard the government had approved an emergency program to build room for 50,000,000 bushels, was easing loan terms. And wheat was higher. Dunagan kept his fingers crossed. Luckily, he also had a job in an Olney store.

Bad storm left fields too muddy for machines only two days after Dunagan's triumph. Prices fell by the hour.

"Gypsy" combines, roving harvest area seeking work, had to stand idle waiting for the sun to dry out the crop.

Job in Lunn's Furniture Store, in Olney, is Dunagan's hedge against vagaries of harvest. It pays household bills.

Dunagan family won't benefit from year's slim wheat profit. Next year, Dunagan jokes, he'll plant sunflowers.

WAITING FOR THE BREAK

It may never there's

PLAYING SECOND FIDDLE in a hit play, strange as it may seem to a musician, is the pie in the sky to both beginner and veteran in the theaters of New York's Broadway.

Understudying a famous star can be tedious. But it does pay a living wage and it gives an ambitious actor top-grade experience. Best of all, it puts him on third base, ready to score, if the play's star meets with an accident, has ill health, or suffers badly from that occupational disease of actors: tantrums of temperament.

There are two types of understudies. One plays a minor role or may even dance in the chorus. For the latter chore he gets the usual salary (about $75 weekly) plus the Actors' Equity minimum for an understudy—a total of $150 per week. The other type, the stand-by, has no other active role, and merely gets paid as insurance against an emergency. Compare this with the stars' $3,000 to $3,500 a week!

The understudy rehearses religiously twice a week, and it's an unwritten law that the star absent himself from these rehearsals. Contrary to general belief, the understudy is not expected to imitate the star. He must make his own personality felt, supply his own shadings.

Personalities like Bobby Clark, Mae West, Ray Bolger, Al Jolson and a handful of others seldom have understudies simply because shows are written around them. A hit like "Miss Liberty" is just the opposite. Here the lure is the score of a master composer—Irving Berlin.

Today's understudies are likely to be tomorrow's stars, so let's look at some of the outstanding ones.

Edward T. Binns, Ralph Bellamy's understudy in "Detective Story," is a 32-year-old war veteran who's been in show business for a dozen years. He hasn't had a chance yet to show his mettle—Bellamy is too healthy.

Former Army Major Dickinson Eastham of Opelousa, La., sang with the St. Louis Grand Opera Association before understudying Ezio Pinza in "South Pacific."

Mary Martin, also of "South Pacific," has a 21-year-old former Rockette named Sandra Deel understudying her songs and antics. Sandra is a veteran of half a dozen musicals and played the ingenue lead in the road company of "Annie Get Your Gun."

Lee Cobb's understudy in "Death of a Salesman" is Robert F. Simon, a 40-year-old Mansfield, O., salesman who as assistant director frequently finds himself coaching the star.

Henry Fonda's shadow in "Mr. Roberts" is Alex Nicol, a former reporter and veteran of summer theater companies. Alex also plays a minor role in the play, one which calls for him to get into a scrap which Fonda breaks up. Once Alex smacked the star a little too hard, then apologized. "I'm not trying to cripple you so I can replace you," he told Fonda.

Lisa Kirk, the singing comedienne in "Kiss Me, Kate," has Louise Howard of Flora, Ill., as her understudy. She doubles as an entertainer at the Blue Angel nightclub.

Also in "Kate," Alfred Drake's new understudy (his first one, Keith Andes, won the lead in the second company), is Ted Scott of Los Angeles. Ted's a stand-by—which means that he has to be at the theater every night.

Patricia Morison, on leave from Hollywood, is understudied by a former University of Denver music student, Peggy Ferris. Peg is also a member of the ensemble. Like her fellow hopefuls, she's waiting for that wonderful break.

Follow chilled soup and savory crackers with a piping hot mixed grill of liver sausage, bologna, tomatoes and bananas, arranged on a large platter.

BROILER DINNER . . . ready in ten minutes

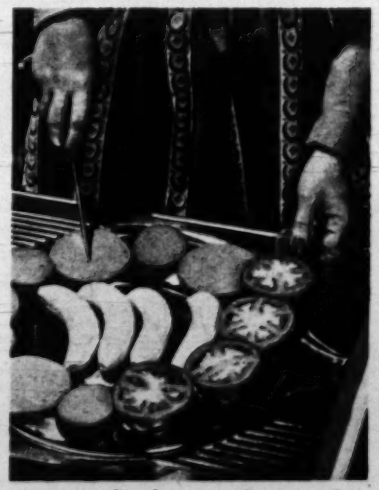
HERE'S A DINNER that's a July joy! Ready for the table in a matter of minutes, and as good to eat as anyone could wish. While the mixed grill is broiling, prepare the crackers and whisk them into the oven for the last few minutes of broiling time. As they toast to a golden brown, add cold milk to chilled, condensed cream of pea soup and give the mixture a brisk whirl with an egg beater. Serve fresh peaches and thick cream for dessert, and generous, cooling, glasses of iced tea or coffee.

Broiler Dinner

4 thick slices bologna
4 thick slices liver sausage
2 large firm tomatoes
4 all-yellow or slightly green-tipped bananas

Have the bologna and liverwurst slices cut about ⅜ inch thick; remove outer casing. Cut a small slit in center of bologna slices to prevent curling. Halve tomatoes; peel bananas. Arrange on broiler rack. Brush all foods with melted butter or margarine. Sprinkle bananas and tomatoes with salt. Place in broiler, with surface of food 3 inches below heat. Broil 10 minutes, turning meats once. Serves 4.



Arrange foods on broiler pan. Cut slits in centers of bologna slices. Brush with melted butter or oleo.

Spread crisp salted crackers with melted butter or margarine. Sprinkle with celery seed. Place in oven.

Finally, add equal amount cold milk to chilled condensed pea soup. Beat with rotary egg beater.

Where Are the Kings?

Somehow they don't make ballplayers like these any more

By FRANK DE BLOIS

IN THE OPINION of that most eccentric of mortals—the average American baseball fan—our national sport has been slipping for years and today is in a condition bordering on the comatose.

The decline began, fans insist, one day in 1937 when Dizzy Dean stubbed his toe while pitching in the annual All-Star game. Favoring the bad toe, the great man next hurt his arm, lost his fog ball and and soon was washed up as a pitcher.

The decline and eventual demise of Dean's pitching arm meant the end of an era. For he was the last of the game's great personalities, the final ham actor.

Today, whenever the hot stove leagues begin to sputter, cracker-barrel baseball philosophers start to dream about Dizzy and his companions in baseball's all-star gallery of colorful kings: a gallery that includes Babe Ruth, John McGraw, Grover Alexander, Rube Waddell, Hack Wilson, Babe Herman, Pepper Martin and Rabbit Maranville.

Some of these immortals are dead now—and most of the others have retired. They are gentlemen ranchers, or gray-haired men running poolrooms, or merely old-timers sitting on the porch in the late afternoon sun. But to those who once saw them play, they're still out there hitting them into the bleachers, making impossible catches, running the bases like wolves.

BABE STILL TOPS THEM ALL

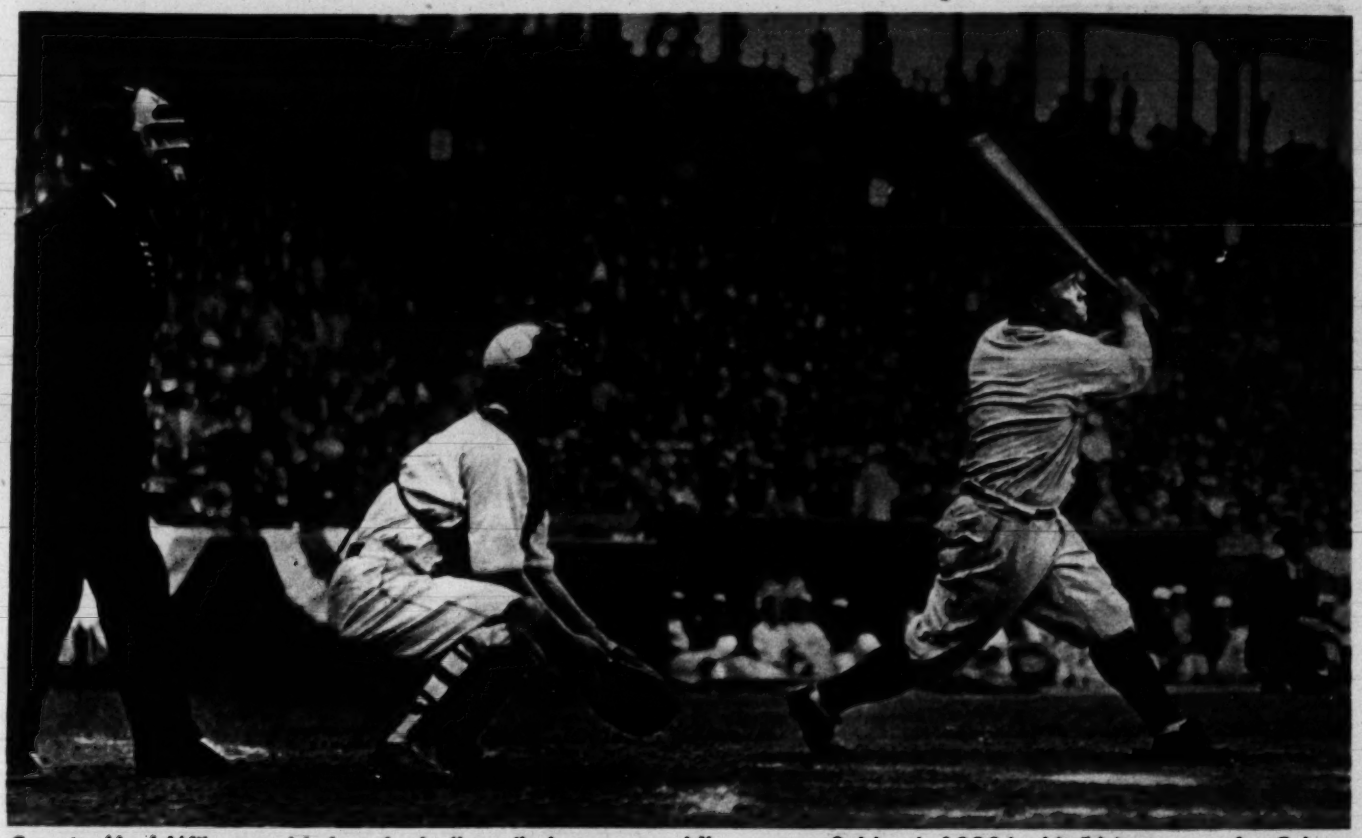
As a personality and player Babe Ruth's name still leads all the rest. A Peter Pan who never grew up, the Babe always behaved as though every afternoon was his first in a ball park and every night was New Year's Eve.

He loved sporty clothes, red neckties, yellow automobiles, hot dogs, soda pop, kids and circuses. And when he was hitting 50 home runs a year his manager, Miller Huggins, couldn't control him at all.

On one occasion Huggins was overheard mumbling to a journalist that he would "speak" to Ruth about the great slugger's late hours. At that moment the Babe came out of his room and strolled jauntily past.

They played a carefree and romantic game in the days of the titans

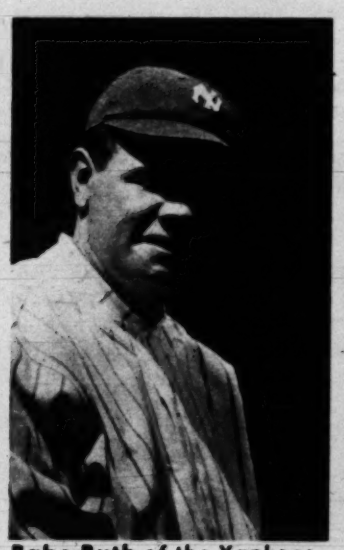
John McGraw, the great, posed with baby leopard in 1913. No leopard, young or old, was ever a match for the Giants' McGraw.



Squatty Hack Wilson could clout the ball a mile but was world's worst outfielder. In 1930 he hit 56 home runs for Cubs.

Runty Rabbit Maranville played 20 years for Boston Braves, perfected famous "basket catch" but could never hit.

Grover Alexander won 373 games for Phillies, Cubs, Cardinals. One of game's all-time greats, he didn't like training.



Babe Ruth of the Yankees, shown back in the '20s, was baseball's greatest slugger, heaviest eater, and earthiest wit.

Dizzy Dean of the Cards was most spectacular figure in post-Ruthian years, once out-talked president of National League.

Throwback to old heroes is today's Yogi Berra of Yankees. As rookie he climbed five flights in hotel to avoid tipping bellhop.

"There he is now," said the writer to Huggins, "do you still intend to speak to him?"

"Certainly," said Huggins. "Hello, Babe."

Next to Ruth the most dominant personality in the baseball history was John McGraw, the little sassbox who managed the New York Giants for more than 30 years. Pictured by magazine writers as a fatherly fellow who "joshed" his players when they dropped a fly ball, McGraw actually was a firebrand who enjoyed nothing more fully than slamming his shortstop—or an umpire—full in the mouth.

A tale, possibly apocryphal, told of McGraw is that he once threatened to flatten an umpire for a mistaken decision.

"Kindly remove your mask," said McGraw.

The umpire obliged and McGraw laid him out like a mackerel on the beach.

Regaining consciousness several hours later, the umpire spoke briefly but bitterly. "That's the last time in me life," he said, "I'll ever do a favor for him."

There are fans spread from coast to coast who still insist that Rube Waddell, a wilderness boy who once toiled for the Philadelphia Athletics, was the most wonderful fellow ever seen on a ball field. Others favor Pepper Martin who fielded hot liners and stole bases with his chest, the fabulous "Old Pete" Alexander or the almost unbreakable Rabbit Maranville. But to Brooklyn fans the undisputed king of the zanies was Babe Herman, a giant who shagged fly balls with his skull and once tripled into a double play.

HE DROVE ROBINSON WILD

In the 1920s Herman patroled right field for the Dodgers, then managed by Wilbert Robinson, a man given to spells of forgetfulness. Robinson seldom remembered the names of his players but he never had trouble identifying the Babe who chased fly balls with the futile persistence of an elderly lady pursuing a tramp with a broom.

"That Herman," Robinson once observed dreamily, "if I had eight more men like him I'd kill myself."

Herman played six years in Brooklyn despite Robinson's persistent efforts to trade, sell or give him away. In 1930 he hit .393 with 35 home runs.

Eventually traded to Cincinnati, Herman quietly disappeared into oblivion. Yet things have never been the same in Flatbush.

"Ever since they let Hoiman go," an Ebbets Field partisan remarked only recently, "conditions have been going to pot around here."

Perhaps so, but even now all is not lost. For two years ago the New York Yankees, a club which usually leans toward decorum, introduced a young catcher who seems destined for big things.

He is Yogi Berra, who although virtually unaware of the uses to which a catcher's mitt may be applied, can whale the ball a mile. And, as a character, he's right up there with the angels.

In a clubhouse chinfest recently, one of Yogi's teammates was complaining that while hunting birds last winter he ducked in and out of the bushes so hard he got a cyst on his back.

"What kind of a bird," asked Yogi, "is a cyst?"

Good Taste: Do You Have It?

HOW GOOD IS YOUR TASTE? Can it be determined by test? Maitland Graves, an American authority on design, thinks it can.

Graves, an instructor in painting at Pratt Institute, in Brooklyn, N.Y., and author of "The Art of Color and Design," has spent 15 years exploring that question, and has come up with what he calls the Design Judgment Test. This can be used with considerable success in measuring your judgment of good or bad design.

Graves based his test on the underlying principles of order in good design—unity, dominance, variety, balance, continuity, symmetry, proportion and rhythm. All these are inherent in any well-designed object, whether it be a painting by Rembrandt, a living room chair, a coffee table, a television set or a shaving brush. The way you respond to these principles. Graves believes, may well be an indication of your good—or bad—taste.

HOW TO TEST YOURSELF

In his standard test, Graves shows you a series of abstract designs and asks you to indicate the ones you prefer. In formulating a test for PARADE readers, however, he has used objects which are not abstract, but are a part of every-day living. In the paired sets of illustrations shown above and on the following two pages, one of each set embodies the principles of good design, while the other deliberately violates them.

Study the details of each set of illustrations, then decide which is the better from the combined standpoint of unity, balance, variety and proportion. Check the one that appeals to you. Your ability to choose the preferred design will measure your design judgment. Correct answers to test questions appear on page 21.

Here are four illustrations. Below them (A, B, C, D) the word "Design" is printed in different type faces. Each type face harmonizes with one of the four drawings. Decide which type face is most appropriate to each illustration. When you have made your choice, write the key letter of each type face next to the number underneath the corresponding picture.

In one of these two copies of the painting, "Mme Gobillard-Morisot," by the French painter,

GOOD TASTE is not the exclusive property of interior decorators, professional designers or millionaires. You use your sense of judgment every time you go shopping for a rug, a piece of furniture, a hat or a necktie, an evening gown or a new suit. Choosing any of these involves problems in color, form and design.

Just how well you can solve such problems depends largely on whether or not you are used to thinking in terms of "superior design." Most people are not. That, all too often, is the province of the professional designer or trained artist. Few people can make good decisions ten times out of ten. If you can, you had better concentrate on becoming an interior decorator or a design consultant. Both jobs pay well and the hours are fine.

In choosing things to live with, most people can be perfectly happy if they stay within their own spheres of taste. The important thing, Graves points out, is to have the courage of your convictions. If you follow your tastes—whether they are good or bad—the results will at least be consistent.

WHAT IS GOOD TASTE?

The fact that an item is expensive does not necessarily mean that it is in good taste. A piece of furniture that violates all the rules of design often sells for twice as much as a simple, functional article of good design. The ultimate test, regardless of price, is whether the item you buy—a table, vase, lamp, handbag or hat—takes its place in the surroundings you provide for it, and looks as though it "belongs."

As to what good taste really is, some one has said that defining it is "very easy, very difficult and practically impossible, and all at the same time." Artists, writers and philosophers have been wrangling for centuries over standard criteria for good taste. Standards change from era to era, decade to decade, sometimes from year to year. What is good today? What is good today where? Why is it good, and who says so?

Putting it simply, your own taste is what you like. It is good or bad only in reference to the opinions of others in your community—especially others on your economic level. You can improve your taste if you learn to recognize and study the good in things you see around you every day.

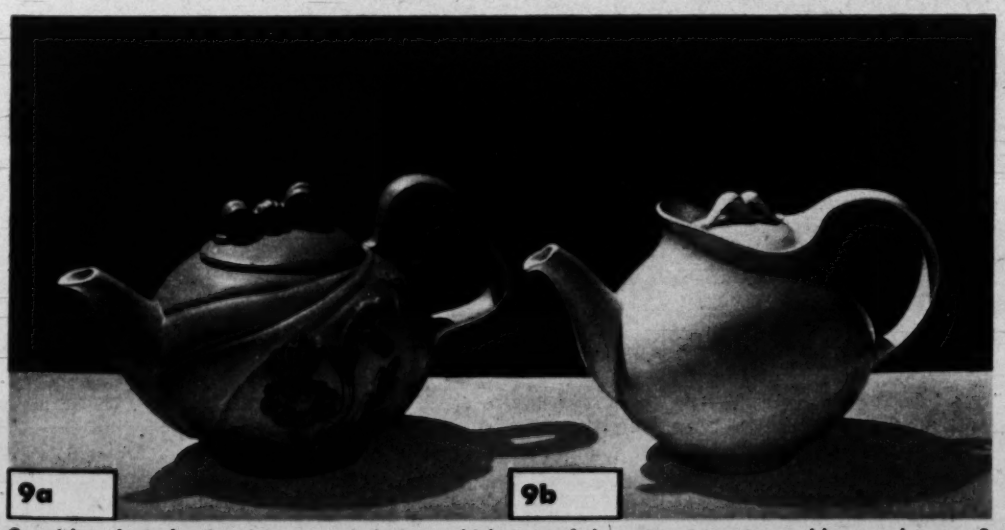
A simple test like the one presented here is not conclusive. For the sake of scoring, however, if you made five "correct" decisions, consider yourself excellent. If you made four, you are fair. If you made a score of six, you can count yourself right up there with the experts.

HERE ARE THE ANSWERS:

Maitland Graves, compiler of PARADE'S test, analyzes correct answers as follows:

1b—Correct ensemble from standpoint of taste and fashion. Other has incorrect accessories (hat, open-toed shoes, gloves, bag, ornate costume jewelry, etc.).

2—B. 3—C. 4—A. 5—D. 6a—The original. Underlying structure is based on subtle repetitions of picture above solo in background. These have been distorted in copy 6b. 7b—Preferable from standpoint of taste and design. Less ornate, cleaner lines. 8a—Better organized arrangement. Natural character of flowers is expressed. 9b—Better in both design and taste. The other is overly ornate, and has poor contours.



Considered on basis of taste and design, which one of these two teapots would appeal to you?

Have you spoken frankly to your daughter about these Intimate Physical Facts?

Before she marries—make sure she has scientific knowledge she can trust!

The practice of vaginal douching two or three times weekly for intimate feminine cleanliness, health, married happiness, after menstrual periods and to combat odor—has become so thoroughly recognized and recommended today, it's no longer a question of whether a woman should douche but rather what she should use in her douche.

And every woman should be made to realize this: Of all the liquid antiseptic-germicides tested for the douche—no other type proved SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to tissues as ZONITE! You can use ZONITE as often as you want without the slightest injury.

Cautions Against Weak or Dangerous Products

It's shocking how many women, through ignorant advice of friends, still use 'kitchen makeshifts' such as salt, soda and vinegar for the douche. These are NOT germicides in the douche. They NEVER can assure you the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

The ZONITE principle was developed by a famous surgeon and chemist—the first antiseptic-germicide principle in the world with such a powerful germ-killing action yet absolutely safe to the most delicate tissues.

Truly a Miracle!

ZONITE positively contains no phenol, no mercury, no harsh acids—overstrong solutions of which may damage tissues and in time even impair functional activity of the mucous glands. ZONITE is strictly non-poisonous, non-irritating—truly a blessing to womankind.

ZONITE destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It immediately kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can BE SURE ZONITE DOES kill every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. Any drug counter.

Their combined retail value in the publishers' original editions is $8.50—yet we'll send you all three for only $1.00 if you join the Dollar Book Club now. Here's a big generous sample of the fascinating reading and huge savings that nearly a million families now enjoy through this bargain book club! Send no money—just mail the coupon below!

NEW! by the author of Came A Cavalier

DINNER AT ANTOINE'S

One Mardi Gras Night in New Orleans —that exploded into Murder!

SEVEN extraordinary guests met for dinner at New Orleans' world-famous Antoine's on the eve of the gay mardi gras. Among them was voluptuous Caresse, a girl madly in love with her sister's playboy husband. That was a night whose scandal rocked the old city!

The NEW "Perry Mason" Thriller!

THE CASE OF THE CAUTIOUS COQUETTE

Beware This Luscious Blonde— Her Every Caress A Booby-Trap!

THE inimitable Perry Mason is faced with a beautiful but dangerous woman, a dead husband, and a man with "a million dollar" alibi which almost sends the wrong party to the deathhouse. It's Erle Stanley Gardner's newest and most sizzling mystery story—the kind of story that has won him millions of readers!

NEW! by the author of Foxes of Harrow

PRIDE'S CASTLE

He Gambled the Love of Two Beautiful Women Against an Empire!

PRIDE DAWSON was a gambler—and loot was his goal, whether it was a robber-baron's fortune or a woman's heart. But one day he had to make a choice—between the woman he loved and the woman who wanted him for 40 million dollars. It's Frank Yerby's most exciting novel to date!

Doubleday One Dollar Book Club, Dept. 7PM, Garden City, New York

Please enroll me as a Dollar Book Club member and send me at once my triple package of books, Dinner at Antoine's, The Case of the Cautious Coquette, and Pride's Castle—ALL 3 FOR $1.00, plus a few cents shipping cost.

With these books will come my first issue of the free descriptive folder called "The Bulletin," telling me about the two new forthcoming one-dollar bargain book selections and several additional bargains which are offered at $1.00* each to members only.

I have the privilege of notifying you in advance if I do not wish either of the following months' selections and whether or not I wish to purchase any of the other bargains at the Special Club price of $1.00 each. The purchase of books is entirely voluntary on my part. I do not have to accept a book every month—only six during each year that I remain as a member. I pay nothing except $1.00 for each selection received plus a few cents shipping cost.

The Only Club That Brings You Best-Sellers for Just $1

YES, the very same titles sold in the publishers' retail editions for $2.75 to $3.00 come to Dollar Book Club members for only $1.00 each—an incredibly big saving of almost two-thirds!

How is that possible, with book manufacturing costs at an all-time high? First, because of the great economies effected in printing huge editions for so large a membership. Second, because the Club's own great new book plant, recently completed at a cost of millions of dollars, is designed for large-scale production with savings never before possible.

Take as Few as Six Books a Year!

Membership in the Dollar Book Club requires no dues of any kind. You do not even have to take a book every month; the purchase of as few as six books a year fulfills your membership requirement. You are not only assured of enjoyable reading, but can build an enviable library of modern American fiction, in handsome, permanent editions, at astoundingly small cost!

Start Enjoying Membership Now

Upon receipt of the attached coupon you will be sent your introductory TRIPLE package of books: Dinner at Antoine's, The Case of the Cautious Coquette, and Pride's Castle, and you will be billed a total of only $1.00, plus a few cents shipping cost, for ALL THREE. Thereafter you will receive regularly the Club's Bulletin, which describes the forthcoming Club selections. It also reviews many other popular books which you may purchase at the Club price of only $1.00 each. You may decide to take no books at all at a particular time, and this is your privilege. You agree to buy only six selections a year.

Send No Money — Just the Coupon

When you see your TRIPLE book package—and realize these three books are typical of the values you will continue to receive from the Club for only $1.00 each, you will be delighted to have become a member! Hurry if you want to take advantage of this offer. Mail the coupon now. Doubleday One Dollar Book Club, Garden City, New York.

TERRY AND THE PIRATES
GEORGE WUNDER

MADEMOISELLE BURGUNDY! I DO NOT UNDERSTAND. I COME TO BRING MY MASTER'S INVITATION TO VISIT HIM AT HIS PALACE. YOU SPURN MY GIFTS. YOU KICK ME OUT. BUT NOW YOU SAY YOU WILL COME.
BUT OF COURSE! CANNOT BURGUNDY DE NEUF, THE GREATEST STAR OF THE FRENCH CINEMA, CHANGE HER MIND?

THE LOWLY SECRETARY OF THE MOGUL BEY IS HAPPY INDEED THAT HIS MISSION IS CROWNED WITH SUCCESS.
I SHALL VISIT MY OLD FRIEND, MOGUL BEY. THE MAKING OF PERSONAL APPEARANCES IN THESE STUPID COLONIAL THEATERS BECOMES DULL.

TERRY, M' LAD. I BEGIN TO WISH WE HADN'T TAILED CURLY CHIN HERE. IT WASN'T UNTIL YOU STOPPED THIS FLICKER FILLY FROM CROWNING HIM WITH A LAMP THAT SHE CHANGED HER MIND. MAYBE SHE CATERS TO THE MASTERFUL TYPE.

MADEMOISELLE REALIZES THAT MY MASTER'S SUBJECTS ARE QUITE, ER, CONSERVATIVE. THERE MUST BE NO PUBLIC GOSSIP. WE MUST BE MOST DISCREET.
OH, OH! THAT'S WHY OUR PAL WAS MAKING LIKE A WHODUNIT.

I SHALL CANCEL THE REST OF MY PERFORMANCES AT THIS MISERABLE HOVEL. WE WILL LEAVE IN THE MORNING.
A THOUSAND THANKS, KIND LADY... COME, GENTLEMEN, LET US GO.

HMPH!
SO! YOU WERE LISTENING AS USUAL, EH, CHARMAINE?

I AM THE HANDMAIDEN OF A FOOL! THE MOGUL BEY WISHES TO MARRY MADEMOISELLE. HER CAREER WANES, YET SHE TERRORIZES THE BEY'S EMISSARY. EVIDENTLY SHE IS NOT INTERESTED IN SECURITY.

STUPID ONE! DO YOU THINK THAT I, WHO'VE MOVED IN THE SMARTEST CIRCLES IN PARIS, WOULD BE CONTENT TO BE THE WIFE OF THE RULER OF INDIAN MUD VILLAGES?
BUT YOUR TUNE CHANGED FAST ENOUGH, ONCE YOU'D SEEN THE BEY'S HANDSOME BLOND PILOT.

SILENCE, CACKLER! THE ATTRACTIVE MR. LEE IS EXACTLY THE TYPE OF WHIP I NEED TO BRING MY FUTURE HUSBAND TO HEEL. I SHALL BE THE WIFE OF THE MOGUL BEY— ON MY TERMS!

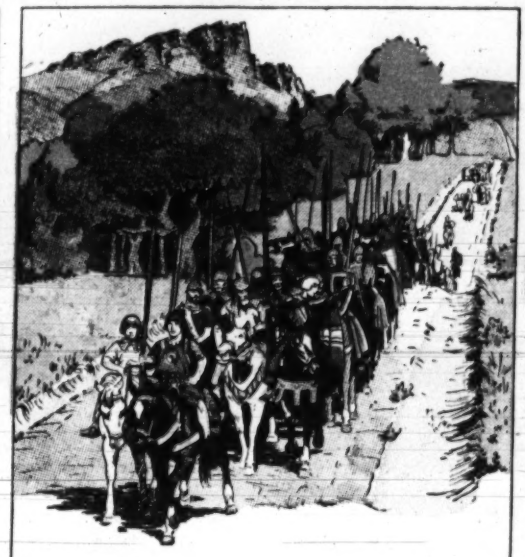
Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

BY HAROLD R FOSTER

Synopsis: GEOFFREY STAYS SO CLOSE TO PRINCE VALIANT THAT HE IS EVER IN THE WAY, FOR HIS BELOVED MISTRESS HAS COMMANDED: "STAY CLOSE TO SIR VALIANT TO AID HIM IN TIME OF PERIL." AND THAT, COME FIRE OR HIGH WATER, HE WILL DO!



FOR THREE DAYS THEY FOLLOW NARROW TRAILS THROUGH THE DIM OAK FORESTS. THEN THEY COME TO THE OLD ROMAN ROAD LEADING NORTHWARD, AND TRAVEL IS EASY AND SWIFT.

VAL GETS HIS ROLLICKING TROOP PAST THE CITY OF YORK WITHOUT TOO MUCH DIFFICULTY AND THEY APPROACH THE TROUBLED LAND NEAR "THE WALL".

AND, THOUGH HE MAY SING AS LOUD AND JOKE AS MERRILY AS HIS MEN, VAL NEVER FORGETS HIS MISSION AND HIS SCOUTS ARE OUT EVEN THOUGH NO DANGER IS EXPECTED..

BUT THE UNEXPECTED HAPPENS! ONE SCOUT DUCKS JUST IN TIME AND RACES BACK TO HIS CAPTAIN WITH NEWS!

EVERYONE HAS BEEN AMUSED AT YOUNG GEOFFREY'S BOYISH DESIRE FOR ADVENTURE — EVEN VAL WOULD THINK HIS REPORT AN EXAGGERATION BUT FOR ONE THING,..... "AND THEIR FACES WERE PAINTED BLUE," GEOFFREY SAYS.

ONLY THE PICTS PAINT THEMSELVES BLUE.... BUT PICTS A DAYS MARCH FROM "THE WALL" CAN ONLY MEAN THAT THEY HAVE BROKEN THROUGH!

THEY RIDE TO THE CREST OF THE NEXT HILL WHERE VAL HALTS HIS TROOP LONG ENOUGH TO MAKE SURE THEY ARE SEEN BY THE PICTS; THEN HE ORDERS, "RETREAT!"

COPR. 1941 KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, Inc., WORLD RIGHTS RESERVED.

HIS MEN DO NOT OBEY; THEY ARE HEARTY FIGHTING MEN, SPOILING FOR A FIGHT. "IS THE NOBLE PRINCE VALIANT AFRAID TO FACE A FEW SHORT-LEGGED PICTS?" A VOICE MOCKS.

THE NEWLYWEDS RETURN

Dear Susie —
Just a card to say we'll be home Sunday — I'm just dying to see our new apartment and Slug is so eager to get on his new job.
Love to all
Minnie
P.S. Slug sends his love to Myrtle and Bingo

YIPPIE

NIAGARA FALLS

I THOUGHT WHEN THE BABY CAME, ELSIE WOULD SETTLE DOWN, BUT SHE'S AS WILD AS EVER.

IT'S PRETTY HARD ON CECIL, BUT THEY'LL HAVE TO WORK IT OUT FOR THEMSELVES

HERE'S A CARD FROM THE NEWLYWEDS. SHALL I READ IT TO YOU?

YOU MIGHT AS WELL. YOU'VE PROBABLY READ IT TO EVERYONE ALL DOWN THE STREET.

WHEN SLUG GOES TO WORK, I'VE SEEN EVERY-THING!

I JUST CAN'T WAIT TO SEE THEM!

GOSH! IF SLUG IS GOING TO WORK, I'LL HAVE TO FIND SOMEONE TO CUT THIS GRASS!

SEE? I TOLD YOU GETTING MARRIED WOULD MAKE A NEW MAN OUT OF SLUG!

SURE! YOU SHOULD HAVE KNOWN ARNOLD BEFORE I CALMED HIM DOWN!

HEAR THAT, SAMPSON? UNCLE SLUG SENDS ME HIS LOVE!

I WALKED RIGHT PAST LILLIAN UP AT THE DRUGSTORE AND I DIDN'T EVEN LOOK AT HER!

YEH! BUT YOU WON'T GET ANY MORE QUARTERS FOR THTAYING OUT OF THE LIVING ROOM

NOW YOU'RE GETTING SMART. SHE'D LEAD YOU A DOG'S LIFE!

OH, SUSIE! WE'RE THE HAPPIEST COUPLE IN THE WORLD, BUT WE SPENT ALL OUR MONEY AND SLUG'S JOB DIDN'T PAN OUT AND THEY RENTED OUR APARTMENT TO SOMEBODY ELSE — SO WE JUST CAME BACK HERE! I'LL BET YOU'RE SURPRISED!

OH, NO!

I'D BETTER PUT A PADLOCK ON MY KENNEL!

GEE WHITH, MYRTLE, I'LL BET THEY TAKE YOUR ROOM AND MAKE YOU THLEEP ON THE DAVEN-PORT.

SLUG DIDN'T SEND ME HIS LOVE FOR NOTHING!
